French Reported Balking at Germany's Terms; Cabinet May Move to Africa to Carry on Fight; U.S. Tells Axis Not to Expect Land in Americas

No Transferring Of Possessions By France Will Be Recognized

By John G. Norris
Post Staff Writer

Moving swiftly as the fate of the French Empire hung in the balance, the United States took two important steps yesterday to insure that French and other Allied possessions in the Western Hemisphere would not fall into German or Italian hands.

A blunt warning was served on Hitler and Mussolini by the State Department that this Nation would oppose any transfer of territory in the Americas from one non-American power to another.

At the same time, Secretary Hull called the 21 American republics together to build a solid hemisphere front for military and economic defense.

Defense Bills Speeded

Simultaneously, Congress moved to back up this action by speeding forward the last two major defense bills—a $1,177,489,788 Army-Navy appropriation measure and the $4,000,000,000 naval expansion program. The former was approved by the Senate Appropriations Committee and brought to the floor, while the latter was given the right of way by the House Rules Committee for early floor action.

The naval bill would authorize the largest fleet the world has ever seen, providing a "two-ocean navy" capable of defending the Americas against a coalition of totalitarian powers attacking from East and West simultaneously. Next year's unprecedented $3,100,000,000 defense outlay would be completed by the other measure.

A State Department announcement revealed that identic notes, setting forth the Nation's determination to enforce the Monroe Doctrine were dispatched to Berlin and Rome Monday, shortly after word was received that the French had sought an armistice which might affect its New World possessions.

Undersecretary of State Sumner Welles announced the calling of the extraordinary Pan American conference, a move exclusively reported yesterday in The Washington Post. He said that while the agenda of the meeting had not yet been formulated it probably would include the plan to form a huge cartel to dispose of North and South American export surpluses.

To Discuss Defense

Plans for joint hemisphere defense were also understood to be scheduled for intensive discussion at the meeting, which is expected to be held in Havana.

Sixteen of the American republics have already replied to the State Department's suggestion, all, it is said, favoring such a conference.

The message to Berlin and Rome followed exactly the resolution passed by both Houses of Congress reaffirming the Monroe Doctrine. The text stated:

"The Government of the United States is informed that the government of France has requested of the German government the terms of an armistice.

"The Government of the United States feels it desirable, in order to avoid any possible misunderstanding, to inform your excellency that in accordance with its traditional policy relating to the Western Hemisphere the United States would not recognize any transfer and

German Planes Raid Britain; R. A. F. Strikes Back Again

By the Associated Press

London (Thursday), June 20. Britain and Germany fought out in the air early today a new series of preliminary skirmishes of the battle of England.

Wide-ranging German planes dropped bombs on England's shores for the second successive night and British bombers apparently repaid the call in Germany.

Bombs exploded near a northeast coastal town, and antiaircraft and fighters battled off other raiders from Scotland to south of London.

The first alarms were sounded just before midnight, Wednesday, and a few minutes after midnight the Bremen and Hamburg radio stations went silent, probably indicating British airmen had been detected on their third successive night-covered visit to Germany's busy northwest industrial and shipping section.

Fight Lasts Long

At 3 a. m. (9 p. m., E.S.T.) gunfire and explosions still were heard in northeast England where bombs were being dropped. The sound of machine gun fire went on for a considerable time after British fighter planes took the air. The raiders encountered heavy opposition from ground batteries.

A powerful searchlight caught one raider in its beam and it made off toward the sea with fighter planes shooting tracer bullets in its wake.

The all clear signal was sounded after 3¼ hours in one town in northeast England.

One German raider was brought down in this section.

Second Hard Blow

It was the second successive night of invasion from the skies—a definite commencement of the Battle of England, the long-awaited sequel to the lost Battle of France.

The raiders appeared just before midnight, as they had Tuesday night, crossing the east and southern coasts. Last night, however, the invaded area was wider.

The first phase of this battle for Britain burst with a fury of bombings, just as Prime Minister Churchill had predicted it would. It had ended in the dawn of Wednesday morning after an estimated 100 Nazi planes had struck at east coast towns and shipping along the lower Thames, killing 12 and wounding 30. Seven German planes were shot down in the first raid.

In reply, squadrons of heavy British bombers smashed rail cen-

Italians Will Not Sit in on Parley On French Fate, Germans Decide

By the United Press

Berlin, June 19.—Shunting Italy out of the armistice picture, victorious Germany left France dangling tonight in distressed uncertainty about when, where and on what terms she might give up her fight for a lost cause.

With Nazis biding their time and branding speculation as impertinent and unfounded, only one thing seemed certain. That was that nothing less than the complete capitulation of France would satisfy Adolf Hitler.

When and where the Germans would receive the French plenipotentiaries was unknown. The German government reserved the right to fix the time and place, and had not seen fit to inform the crushed adversary of its decision—if one had been made.

Duce Won't Be There

Whether Hitler himself would sit down with the French to dictate his terms for a cessation of hostilities likewise was "unknown."

But on one angle of the situation the official spokesman could speak positively. Only Germans and Frenchmen would sit down at the conference table. Premier Mussolini, who entered the war only when French resistance was collapsing rapidly, will not be there, nor will any Italian representative.

"Italian interests are in good hands after yesterday's Munich agreement," it was said by way of explanation.

Talk of Partition

Berlin, June 19 (AP).—German pursuit of the shattered armies of France assumed the proportions of a gigantic and tragic chase tonight as Berlin and Rome awaited French decision on the Axis Powers' crushing peace terms.

Strictest secrecy was observed in Berlin regarding the precise nature of these terms. But inspired press comment indicated their acceptance would mean not only the partition of France but the harnessing of that country's resources to the great German drive against England.

Approximately half of France is now in German hands, authorized German sources said, as the string of German military successes lengthened with bewildering rapidity.

The great seaport of Cherbourg, the industrial city of Nancy, and Rennes, vital railway junction in Brittany, were reported in German hands.

In their southward thrust Nazi troops were near Lyon, 200 miles

GERMAN BOMBS THUNDER down on refugee-crowded Bordeaux, as if in partial confirmation of rumors the French cabinet rejected German-Italian peace terms and is preparing to flee to Algiers to carry on the war. Madrid reports of a new French note to Germany and of French planes flying toward Africa tend to substantiate the rumor.

FRENCH NEGOTIATORS, HOWEVER, are reported en route, to receive the terms from the Germans—with no Italians present. Bordeaux is said to have based its rumored rejection on informal knowledge of the Axis demands.

GERMAN ARMIES MEANWHILE spread over half of France, advancing on a confused front stretching from near Nantes east to the vicinity of Lyon. Swiss reports indicate comparatively fresh Maginot Line troops, now in the Ain Valley, are holding back weakened Nazi tank columns.

Bordeaux Raided As Government There Describes Offer as 'Harsh'

By the Associated Press

Bordeaux, France (Thursday), June 20.—Reports were widely circulated last night—without official confirmation—that Germany's major peace terms are unacceptable to the French and that President Lebrun and other leaders have gone, or may soon go, to Algiers to preserve the framework of a fighting government.

While Bordeaux, its normal population of 250,000 swollen five-fold by throngs of refugees, buzzed with the question of whether to expect peace or war, German planes swarmed over the city in four raids shortly after 1:30 a. m. (7:30 p. m. E. S. T.)

Newspaper correspondents were unable to establish extent of the damage or casualties, but from their air raid shelter they could hear the German bombers swooping low over the crowded streets and buildings, dumping their loads in the first major air raid the city has suffered.

Lebrun, one report said, was or would be accompanied to Africa by the presidents of the Chamber of Deputies and Senate, respectively Edouard Herriot and Jules Jeanneney.

The reports seemed to converge in the sense that France may try to fight on.

Main Demands Too Harsh

Officially it was stated merely that the French government has submitted the names of its negotiators to the Germans and is awaiting an answer.

However, last night's reports said the government of Marshal Petain had learned the gist of the main German terms, and had found them too harsh.

(A British radio broadcast picked up tonight by N. B. C. said three French representatives, Gen. Hutziger, Paul Bandouin and Leon Noel, had left for an undisclosed destination.)

If France does continue the fight, it was thought likely she must fall back on her North African possessions, from which her armies and those of Britain could squeeze Italian Libya.

[Tending to substantiate this belief were these developments:

[A new French note for transmission to Germany was received in Madrid hours after the French negotiators were reported leaving Bordeaux, the United Press said. Spaniards said the note was unexpected, as it had been believed Spain's role as intermediary had ended. Official Spanish circles said they had no knowledge of Italian reports France was prepared for unconditional surrender.]

May Unite With Britain

[The official Italian radio said, shortly after 6 p. m., E. S. T., last night that the text of German demands on France might be expected "within a few hours." Germany had made clear that the terms would not be published until their acceptance—or rejection—by France.

[The French war office spokesman told the United Press the French air force is fleeing southward to establish new bases, and an Associated Press Madrid dispatch said heavy movement of French military planes to Africa was confirmed when four French

Senate Passes Tax Bill, Levy On War Profits

Adjournment Saturday 'Doubtful,' Barkley Says

After unexpectedly adding a war profits tax and an excess profits levy, the Senate last night approved the Administration's emergency bill to raise an extra billion dollars in annual revenue for the next five years and to increase the national debt limit by $4,000,000,000.

Although Majority Leader Barkley admitted that adjournment Saturday was "extremely doubtful," the Senate was held in session until 10:30 p. m. to pass the bill.

The excess profits amendment, proposed by Senator La Follette (Progressive), of Wisconsin, was adopted by a 41-31 vote which shattered party lines and found Barkley and Chairman Harrison of the Finance Committee on the losing side.

A few minutes before final passage, the Senate accepted, 51 to 28, as an amendment, a 329-page bill by Senator Connally (Democrat), of Texas, imposing in wartime a maximum surtax of 88 per cent, expected, on the basis of 1938 figures, to yield a possible $8,000,000,000 on incomes alone.

"It milks the old cow right down to the point of exhaustion but it doesn't exhaust her," Connally declared.

But those drastic changes must

Insists He'll Build Engines for U. S. Defense Only

An apparent misunderstanding between Henry Ford and the President's Advisory Defense Commission threatened late yesterday to delay indefinitely signing of contracts for 9,000 of the powerful Rolls-Royce Merlin engines needed to drive American and Allied planes.

The hitch came within 24 hours after announcement had been made here and in London that the Ford Motor Co., largest single producing plant in the world, would turn out 6,000 of the Rolls Royce engines for Britain and 3,000 for the United States Government.

Henry Ford, founder of the firm, then asserted in Detroit yesterday that if he makes munitions it will be for "defensive purposes only," the Associated Press reported.

The white-haired inventor-manufacturer was quoted as saying:

"We are not doing business with the British government or any foreign government. If we make 6,000 Rolls-Royce Merlin engines it will be on an order from the United States Government."

This brought a quick counter-statement from William S. Knudsen, production member of the Defense Commission, who last week negotiated with young Edsel Ford, president of the Ford Motor Co., for

White House Explains

President Takes Responsibility For Sale of Boats to Allies

President Roosevelt approved arrangements for the Electric Boat Company to sell to Great Britain 20 high speed motor torpedo boats ordered for the United States fleet, it was announced yesterday.

At the Whites House, Stephen Early, press secretary, said President Roosevelt had approved recommendations of the Navy and Treasury Departments for the transaction inasmuch as torpedoes for the ships could not be ready before late fall.

Both Early and naval spokesmen declared the United States would be benefited by letting the British get the craft. Benefits will include, they said, not only a plant expansion obtained without cost to the United States but also the production later on of a boat of improved design firing a standard 21-inch torpedo rather than the 18-inch projectile of the ships made available to the British.

One reporer told Early that Chairman Walsh (Democrat), of the Senate Naval Committee, had said the deal was made "surreptitiously." The Secretary declared there was "nothing surreptitious that we know of" about it.

Chairman Vinson of the House Naval Affairs Committee, after learning of the proposed transfer, wrote into the $4,000,000,000 naval expansion bill, reported out Tuesday, a provision that "no vessel, ship or boat now in the United States Navy or being built thereto shall be disposed of by sale, charter or otherwise, or scrapped, without the consent of Congress."

Walsh said later that release of the boats was "a grievous wrong

Curious Homecoming

G. O. P. Cheers Lewis' Blast At Roosevelt's Training Plan

By Robert C. Albright,
Post Staff Writer

Philadelphia, June 19.—John L. Lewis practically stopped Republican platform deliberations today by asserting that President Roosevelt's proposal for compulsory national service for American youth "is a fantastic suggestion from a mind in full intellectual retreat."

Committeemen cheered a full minute and business waited while leading G. O. P. figures gathered around the C. I. O. leader to pump his hand.

It was a curious homecoming for the former leftist Republican who has been alternately on and off the New Deal since he bolted the American Federation of Labor.

Coupled with his Monday night blast against Roosevelt and defense of Herbert Hoover, many construed Lewis' presentation before the resolutions committee today as an implicit offer of labor support should the Republican party inveigh against war involvement and oppose the pending Smith Labor Relations Act amendments.

Earlier Lewis' bitter labor foe, President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, had presented the rival craft union case and said labor is prepared to make "the same sacrifices as the average American citizen" in furtherance of the American preparedness program.

Green did not comment on the compulsory Government youth service plan, which temporarily overshadowed other platform business as Republican leaders hastened to condemn it. But Green declared for "every ounce of assistance and support" to the European democracies, short of entry into war, a stand approved by leading platform drafters.

Representatives of industries, farmers, women, airplane pilots, Negroes, economists, investment bankers, physicians, radio broadcasters, Townsendites, peace advocates, dentists and smal. business men meanwhile trooped before the resolutions committee in open hearings expected to extend far into the night.

Lewis' comment on the President was elicited by former Gov. Alf M. Landon who asked the C. I. O. chief in open session what he thought of the compulsory youth service plan. Lewis said he concurred in Landon's statement that it was an attempt to

Rome Expects Severe Terms For France

Army of Occupation Predicted to Police Beaten Republic

By the Associated Press

Rome, June 19.—A warning by the United States that it would not stand for annexation by Germany or Italy of British or French territory in the American hemisphere was disclosed today while Fascists discussed the axis peace terms for France.

Italian sources predicted the terms would be pointed toward preventing the republic from giving any help to Britain.

They indicated that Germany, and perhaps Italy too, would maintain an army of occupation in France after an armistice based on severe terms.

Aside from this, there was no unanimity here in predictions as to just what Benito Mussolini and Adolf Hitler had demanded of the beaten French, other than the long-held supposition that France would be required to give up some of its territory, both on the Continent and in its colonies. Italy already is claiming Savoy with Nice, Corsica, Tunisia and Djibouti.

The authoritative newspaper, Giornale d'Italia, declared the conditions would be more generous than those imposed on Germany at Versailles.

Turkey Fears Russian Drive On Dardanelles

Exodus of Civilians From Adrianople Is Reported

By International News Service

Ankara, June 19.—Widespread fear Russia may attempt to take the Dardenelles and Bosporus, under the same pretexts given for the bloodless invasion of the Baltic states, were prevalent in Turkey tonight.

It was unofficially reported evacuation of civilians from Adrianople already has begun.

Likewise, confiscation of private automobiles for use by the military has commenced in Istanbul.

There were continuing unofficial reports in Ankara of increasing Russian troop concentrations in the Crimea, leading to the belief the Soviets may attempt to take over the Turkish straits on the pretext that such a move is necessary to "Soviet security."

There was great activity at the military depots and piers in Istanbul tonight. It was surmised that war supplies are being shipped to Thrace.

Jehovah's Witnesses Routed

Rockville Crowd Raids Hall Of Sect as Police Look On

A crowd of Rockville (Md.) men estimated variously to number from 50 to 200 descended on a meeting of Jehovah's Witnesses there last night carrying an American flag and raided the meeting hall when members of the religious sect refused to salute the flag.

Desks, chairs, typewriters, literature and records were destroyed by the crowd, said by police to include ex-service men and "leading citizens" of Rockville.

Between 20 and 30 men, women and children attending the meeting, fled to the street. Two men were taken into "protective custody" by Montgomery County police, who watched the affair to see that there was no physical violence.

The rest of the witnesses were "run out of town," according to Benny Burroughs, who carried the flag in the demonstration.

Police finally dispersed the crowd, which before the raid about 8:30 p. m. gathered across Montgomery street from Cumar's store, where Judge Rutherford's sect was meeting on the second floor.

Policeman L. B. Thompson told The Post he and Policeman Charles Peters entered the meeting while the crowd waited outside, asked the gathering to salute the flag and met with refusal.

Whereupon, Thompson said, he and Peters went back across the street and warned the crowd against any physical violence.

According to Burroughs, one Jehovah's Witness declared "I'd rather salute a whisky bottle" when told to salute the flag.

LEAST JITTERY: Luckily, the least jittery people in the Capital seem to be the Army people. They lift an eyebrow at the noisier and more nervous patriots who see Hitler walking ashore on every beach, and seem even slightly amused by the abject alarmists. They just keep pegging away at defense, a good example for others who should be concentrating on their jobs, too.

F. D. R.'s HUMOR: At the moment the crisis seems to have left the President's humor fairly unimpaired. Asked for a definition of "nonbelligerent," he replied that he just hadn't time to open his thesaurus.

And when squeezed for answers to questions on delicate ground, he has prefaced a soft answer (which in other days might have been a devastating answer) with phrases like "among us girls."

NONE FOR WENDELL: Recently some top-rank Pennsylvania politicians decided they hadn't been paying enough attention to the Willkie candidacy. So they invited him to a cocktail party at Philadelphia just before the convention, just for the elite.

"We want you to meet the Republicans who matter," they said.

"Listen," was Willkie's reply, "I'm not going to any cocktail parties. If you know where a couple of labor unions are having a beer picnic, I'd like to go to that."

He recalled that his college chum, Paul McNutt, once went to a big cocktail party.

HOSTESSES AT BAY: In the blessed isle of Bermuda the war rears its ugly head in minor ways. Hostesses at the soldiers' canteens mustn't accept letters to mail. They must drink their tea by 3:45 p. m., either in the pantry or their sitting room.

What's more, if the soldiers get boisterous they mustn't be scolded openly. They must be approached tactfully and as privately as possible and asked to pipe down, in dulcet tones. Those are the regulations.

VAN'S PALS VEXED: Some of Senator Vandenberg's boosters, who still think that Willkie or no Willkie he has the best chance to be nominated in a G. O. P. deadlock between Dewey and Taft, are indignant at gossip that Vandenberg is going pro-Willkie.

They say that Vandenberg is still the man of destiny. They frown on stories that he has spent as much as 15 minutes eulogizing Willkie in casual conversations. This, they insist, is just artful Willkie propaganda . . . But the Senator cultivates a certain indifference to the White House and is not below praising a rival.

Farley Says Speaker Bankhead Will Be Democratic Keynoter

Democrats Expected To Make Barkley Permanent Chairman

Chicago, June 19 (INS).—Selection of Representative William B. Bankhead for temporary chairman and keynote speaker of the National Democratic Convention, and Senator Alban W. Barkley for permanent chairman, was virtually assured tonight following announcement of the slate by National Chairman James A. Farley.

Farley said the names of Bankhead, Speaker of the House, and Barkley, Senate majority leader, undoubtedly would be approved tomorrow at a meeting in Chicago of the arrangements committee, of which Farley is chairman.

Roosevelt Approves

The Postmaster General said he had talked over the convention slate with President Roosevelt and that the President had approved both men for the places they are expected to have in the convention. Senator Barkley was keynoter of the 1932 and 1936 Democratic conventions.

The chairmanship of the important resolutions committee still is undecided, Farley said. Senator James F. Byrnes, of South Carolina, and Senator Robert F. Wagner, of New York, have been mentioned for the post.

"That choice," said Farley, "will be made by the full resolutions committee. I understand, however, however, that friends of Senator Wagner are urging his selection, and probably they will be quite insistent."

It was generally conceded among Democratic leaders, however, that should word come that Senator Byrnes was favored by the White House, there would not be a serious contest by the Wagner backers.

"No One Can Foresee"

Chairman Farley declined to predict whether there would be a split in the convention between the isolationists, led by Senator Burton K. Wheeler, of Montana, and those who are supporting the Administration in its policy of every aid to the Allies short of war.

"Things are changing so rapidly, even day by day," he said, "that no one can foresee precisely what the convention might do on many of these questions now gripping everybody."

He also evaded questions as to his own candidacy and as to who might get second place on the Democratic ticket. As to the latter, he said:

"That will be up to the Presidential nominee."

"Of course, Mr. Roosevelt will head the ticket," it was suggested to him.

Farley smiled broadly, but said nothing.

Mrs. Phelan Dies After 4-Day Illness

Mrs. Florence Lanahan Phelan, 60, widow of William Daly Phelan, Pittsburgh business man, died yesterday at Garfield Hospital after a four-day illness.

The daughter of James Krickard Lanahan, Pittsburgh industrialist and financier, Mrs. Phelan came to Washington 20 years ago, ten years after the death of her husband. She lived at 2200 Nineteenth street northwest.

Surviving are two children, Miss Mary Lanahan Phelan, of Washington, and William Daly Phelan, jr., of Westfield, N. J. Funeral services will be Saturday morning in St. Paul's Cathedral, Pittsburgh.

Mrs. Edward M. Johnson, the boy's mother, said he had planned to go swimming at a nearby branch of the Police Boys Club, but changed his plans.

Edward was an eighth grade student at Eliot Junior High School. Besides Mrs. Johnson, he leaves his father, a Capital Transit Co., motorman, four sisters, Margaret, 17, Evelyn, 15; Christine, 10; Jean, 7, and a brother, George, 3.

form youth in "organized labor battalions."

Other developments as Republican activity hit a near convention pace:

Gov. James, of Pennsylvania, first dark horse possibility to arrive at headquarters, indicated he was not a serious candidate but would hold Pennsylvania convention votes in line through early ballots for some one else. He would not say what candidate Keystone State leaders with whom he conferred now favor, but said they are against "certain persons."

The Republican National Committee opened hearings on 60 disputed delegate seats, beginning with a pitched fight between opposing claimants for Florida's 12 seats. All leading candidates have a stake in the contests. Officials said each contest will be decided on its merits, but the special contests committee, set up several weeks ago, appears dominated by Dewey supporters over Taft adherents about two to one.

David S. Ingalls, preconvention manager for Taft, without naming his target aimed a brick at Wendell L. Willkie, fast-moving late entry. Ingalls said the nominee should be a man steeped in Republican "principles and traditions" (Willkie formerly was a Democrat), and not one the party "will have to explain and defend from the beginning."

Luther C. Steward, of Washington, speaking for the National Federation of Federal Employes and affiliated Federal worker groups, urged the resolutions committee to go on record for a constitutional amendment extending merit and fitness standards to all branches of public service, national, State and local. He asked elimination of political considerations in appointments to all except policy-making jobs.

Steward stressed the increasing importance of Government efficiency in the present defense task, and argued that merit standards and continuous tenure of fit personnel are needed for satisfactory performance of duty.

He was complimented on his statement by Herbert K. Hyde, chairman of the resolutions committee. Hyde told The Post that from six years in the Government service he recognized the value of the merit appointments and would work for recognition in the G. O. P. platform.

Steward estimated that some 200,000 Federal jobs are still filled on a non-merit basis.

Urges Labor Program

Lewis told Republicans they had left nearly 12,000,000 unemployed in 1932, said the Democratic administration had "done nothing about it" and enjoined the G. O. P. to formulate a labor program "that will gain the confidence of the people." He said the workers will "give their confidence and support to the political party which undertakes to meet that problem."

Landon's question on the compulsory national service proposal came after the Kansan in an interview had declared the President "can't keep on saying any damned thing he pleases and doing any damned thing he please and keep this country out of war."

Prior to the hearing, Landon had met Lewis for the first time and had suggested he would "like to visit with him sometime." Lewis had replied he would like that "if it wouldn't alarm the country."

Tuesday night Senator Davis, Republican, of Pennsylvania, had conferred with Lewis and said Lewis told him:

"This is a fine opportunity for a ringing declaration from the Republican Party to bring labor back into the fold. If they miss this chance, it's the end of the Republican Party."

Following the C. I. O. head's testimony, Landon told reporters that with minor exceptions Lewis' declaration of labor objectives were like those in Dr. Glenn Frank's program report. Dr. Frank also told newsmen the Lewis labor recommendations were "almost precisely" the four goals in his report.

These declared for jobs in productive enterprise, organization of workers in "whatever form" suited to their interests, progressive contribution by labor to increased industrial efficiency, and an informed labor voice in public policies.

Green Gives Views

Green, who appeared earlier with less fanfare, told the committee the A. F. of L. stands "unanimously behind the Government in the execution of its national defense program. We will try to render all service possible and develop cooperation between employers and employes and reduce industrial conflicts to a minimum."

While Green said labor is prepared to make such sacrifices as the average citizen is called on to make, he insisted that the rights of workers must be safeguarded and that minimum wages, maximum hours and social legislative standards must not be lowered. He asked representation in the President's Cabinet by appointment of a Secretary of Labor who is a member of the A. F. of L.

Noel Sargent, secretary of the National Association of Manufacturers, meanwhile presented the industrial view, asserting that if the Nation is internally sound, it can be externally secure, and that putting its own house in order is a vital part of national preparedness. Sargent said Government attitudes either directly or indirectly are putting obstacles in the path of an adequate defense system, the maintenance of personal liberties and economic recovery.

A constitutional amendment to give equal rights to women was urged by Mrs. R. S. Greathouse, of Baltimore, representing the National Association of Women Lawyers, and Miss Helen Hunt West, of Philadelphia, representing the Pilots Club of America. Mrs. James W. Morrison, speaking for the National League of Women Voters, demanded extension of the merit system and the use of tariffs "as a weapon of war to meet dictators' threats."

Dawes Urges Preparedness Coordinator

Place Program Under Strong Central Control, He Advises

By the Associated Press

Chicago, June 19.—Gen. Charles G. Dawes tonight urged the Government to place the preparedness program "under a powerful central control" and suggested that the President assign an outstanding industrial expert to the task of cordinating the work of all departments and agencies involved.

Advocating the creation of the key job of "chief coordinator," Dawes, former Vice President and World War chief of supply procurement for the American Expeditionary Force, asserted:

"At this time, when our Government is preparing to be able to meet totalitarian attack, it must proceed with totalitarian speed and efficiency under a powerful central control . . .

"If the Government does not set up immediately an effective system of internal coordination as it enters upon an additional and gigantic effort for war preparedness, it will fail, wasting not only enormous resources but . . . an incalculable amount of time . . .

Correct Principles Urged

"Wake up, Washington! National war preparedness is primarily a military as well as a business effort and will fail unless worked out under guiding military principles as well as correct business principles."

Dawes, in a prepared address before the National Retail Dry Goods Association, recalled the Napoleonic maxim: "Nothing is more important than a central command—under one chief."

He proposed that the Federal Coordinating Service be revived by the "chief coordinator." As the first Director of the Budget, Dawes established the system in 1921. It was abolished by executive order in 1933.

Dawes outlined this procedure to assure efficient team work in the national defense program:

"1. A chief coordinator should be appointed by the President, to act under his authority alone. . . .

Counsels Against Advisory Boards

"2. Experienced business leaders . . . should become government officials and added by the President to the staff of the chief coordinator.

"3. The chief coordinator should select a crops of coordinators of knowledge and experience in the work of the various departments, who, when detailed for srevice under him, should be regarded as serving under the President and should be exempt from control of any kind by the departments or establishments upon whose rolls they are carried."

The coordinators would perfect the machinery of cooperation in all branches of the Government with an eye to speed, efficiency and economy.

Dawes counseled against advisory committees and boards. He contended that such procedure had been "fatal to proper military preparedness" in the United States in 1917 and in the Allied nations this year while German industrialists had functioned efficiently under the direct rule to Marshal Goering.

Children's Camp Campaign $5,000 Short of Goal

Faced with the prospect of cutting several hundred names from the list of underprivileged children it hoped to send to camps this summer, the Washington Council of Church Women begins the final day of its ten-day "Needy Children's Camps" campaign this morning, $5,000 short of the $7,500 goal.

Other children selected by school agencies will not be able to stay as long as had been planned at the camps unless the goal is reached, said Mrs. Frank A. Linzel, chairman of the drive.

Contributions should be mailed to Claude Kniseley at the Riggs National Bank.

Streamlined Securities Act Is Aim of SEC

Commission to Confer With Wall Street On Changes in Law

After seven years' working experience, the Securities and Exchange Commission will confer with Wall Street representatives to try to write a streamlined version of the 1933 Securities Act, basic New Deal law aimed to protect investors, the commission said yesterday.

Made public was correspondence between Commission Chairman Jerome Frank and Representative Clarence F. Lea, chairman of the House Committee on Intestate and Foreign Commerce, foreshadowing this development.

On the day that spokesmen for the securities business were to tell the committee how they want the law changed, letters between Frank and Lea were published that indicated the entire question of revamping the law may be worked out by negotiation and that no legislation would be presented to Congress until January.

Commission officials expressed confidence that the controversial "death sentence" clause of the Utility Holding Company law would be upheld by the courts, after they examined a Federal court decision sustaining SEC's power to receive voluntary plans of corporate simplification from holding companies.

The decision was a ruling in favor of the Community Power & Light Co. handed down Saturday by the United States District court for the Southern District of New York.

A major consideration in rewriting the Securities Act would be amendments sponsored in Congress by Lea. These would:

Allow securities to be marketed immediately upon filing of a registration statement by "qualified issuers," thus repealing the 20-day waiting period now in force.

Exempt from the filing requirement all issues of less than $1,000,000 instead of the exemption limit of $100,000 now prevailing.

Relax civil liability provisions for filing of false registration statements.

Loosen the procedure of the law and make other changes intended to relax some requirements.

Lea wrote Frank that he was pleased with the commission's proposal and that the "cooperation to improve the status of our capital markets will give assurance to the country."

production of the liquid-cooled engines.

Knudsen said in his statement that Edsel Ford had assured him the Ford company had no objections to producing for the Allies.

"It Was Made Plain"

"In negotiations with the Ford Motor Co. is was made plain that 60 per cent of the order for Rolls-Royce engines was for the Allies and the balance for the United States Government. I was assured by Mr. Edsel Ford, president, that this arrangement was satisfactory to the Ford Motor Co. No contracts have been signed as yet. They are still in negotiation."

There was speculation among officials last night on what might become of the plans to make the Rolls Royce engine by mass production if Henry Ford clung to his determination to manufacture "for defense purposes only."

"That defense puspose only' has been and still is part of the bargain all the way through," Henry Ford was quoted by the Associated Press as saying yesterday. "We have no agreement with anybody for the production of war materials and if and when we do have one it will be on that basis and with the United States Government only."

U. S. Gets French Plans

As this difference developed, Secretary of the Treasury Morgethau announced that the French government had turned over to the United States the designs for the high-powered Hispano-Suiza engine.

No manufacturer has yet been found for this engine, Morgenthau said, but the French offer makes the patents available to both the United States and the Allies.

Arrangements to secure the patents and two working examples of the Hispano-Suiza were made by William C. Bullitt, American Ambassador to France, the Treasury chief said, just as Ambassador Kennedy in London arranged for licensing of the Rolls-Royce engine.

Treasury aids said they were not certain whether the French were sending plans for the 2,000-horsepower, 24-cylinder Hispano-Suiza or the 1,100 horsepower, 12-cylinder edition. Both were thought suitable for bombers or pursuit planes, officials said, and it was held possible that plans for both might be on the way.

Urged Vast Expansion of Navy After Munich, Edison Reveals

Jersey City, N. J., June 19 (AP).—Secretary of the Navy Edison disclosed today that after appeasement at Munich in September, 1938, he recommended a $5,000,000,000 expenditure for expansion of the United States Navy "but it was apparently decided that the country was not yet ready for that."

"You may speculate on to whom I made the recommendation," Edison said in an interview after receiving an honorary doctor of laws degree at John Marshall School of Law. "I renewed the recommendtaion one month ago but then I made it ten billion. In a blue chip game we have to play with blue chips or get out of the game."

Asked whether he believed the United States would be involved in the war, Edison replied:

"I do not think we will have a thing to say about it. It will be imposed upon us. We will certainly be invaded economically. Any dislocation of the world of the present magnitude will make a tremendous dislocation here."

Edison will quit his Navy post June 24 to campaign as the Democratic nominee for Governor of New Jersey.

U. S. Youth Ready to Bear Burdens of Defense, Junior C. of C. Chief Tells Convention Here

Democracy's Danger Is Clear to Them, Pipkin Declares

The United States Junior Chamber of Commerce through its president, Perry Pipkin, of Memphis, Tenn., yesterday assured President Roosevelt and the "peoples of the United States" "that the youth of America is ready to assume whatever defensive burdens an unkind fate has compelled us to assume."

Addressing the first session of the chamber's convention here, Pipkin pronounced isolation dead as a "practical issue" and declared:

"Like the democratic young men of Britain and France we are conscious that we must assume responsibilities that we had not cared to undertake so that, in the end, the life that we and that which our forefathers enjoyed may continue and may be expanded—I mean, a life which in its economic aspects is characterized by peace, by prosperity, and by a sense of ultimate security.

"We Are Americans"

"We now understand as perhaps we did not a year ago that the world of which we are a part is at the crossroads. At this point I wish to declare that we are Americans. I wish to declare that we are ardent, faithful, and hopeful believers in the democratic pattern of life."

Pipkin's speech was acclaimed with cheers by the nearly 2,000 delegates, most of whom are of the age of the first draftees of the last war.

President Roosevelt in a letter, read by Pipkin to the luncheon gathering in the Mayflower Hotel, expressed hope that the convention would "make its contribution to the cause of national defense."

Developments of the last few months, the President declared, demand "clear and straightforward thinking from all of us."

As if in response to the President's plea, Pipkin warned that the organization should not stop with "the passing of resolutions and establishing stands" but should carry on a "program of action in our local Junior Chambers of Commerce."

Delegates Entertained

The speech struck the only serious note of the conventions first day. Most of the delegates took full advantage of opportunities for having a good time until a general session on national defense this morning when Henry F. Grady, Assistant Secretary of State; Admiral Harold R. Stark, Chief of Naval Operations, and Gen. George C. Marshal, Chief of Staff, U. S. Army, will speak.

It is doubtful if the staid Mayflower has seen a convention like this one. One end of the lobby is crammed with exhibits where endless supplies of oranges, orange juice, apples and cigars are distributed to advertise the leading products of several States.

Through the main lobby stream young men in bright slack suits, some with their names embossed on the backs, and in the costumes of Pony Express riders and Kentucky Colonels. The delegation from Wellesburg, Colo., wears beards grown since March.

Lasser Quits As Workers Alliance Head

Charges Domination By 'Political Group;' Communists Hinted

David Lasser yesterday resigned as national president of the Workers Alliance of America, charging that the organization of relief workers had come under the "domination and control" of a "political group."

In a statement to the press and at an afternoon press conference, he refused to name the group he meant. The Post learned that his letter of resignation to the national executive board and locals said the "group" was the Communist Party.

Lasser declared that "the overwhelming majority of the members of the Workers Alliance are not members of the political group nor do they subscribe to its philosophy."

He said his resignation followed a futile five-month effort to alter the policies of "the dominant political group." These policies, he added, "had driven out of the organization many thousands of sincere militant unemployed who did not wish to be under the thumb" of this group.

Replying to Lasser's charges, of Frank Ingram, secretary of the alliance, declared that "our former president has become weak-kneed" in the face of "war hysteria, the clamor of reaction to outlaw progressive labor organizations, and the drive to deprive labor, the unemployed, and the people in general of their civil rights."

Accusing Lassar of being "unethical and undemocratic" for not presenting the issue to the alliance's fifth national convention, schoduled for July 11 in Chicago, Ingram denied allegations of Communist control and stated that the split occurred over the foreign and national defense policies of the Roosevelt Administration.

Lasser, he said, adopted a "conciliatory attitude" toward the Roosevelt policies and "was horrified when large sections of the Workers Alliance branked President Roosevelt's ignoring the needs of the unemployed as a betrayal."

National Park Director Resigns

By Edward Ryan

Arno B. Cammerer, director of the National Park Service since 1933, has resigned from his job because of ill health. The position, Secretary Ickes announced yesterday, will be filled by Newton Drury, California State park official, and Cammerer will stay in the service as an adviser.

Cammerer, who joined the park service 21 years ago as assistant director, has supervised a 7-year expansion program which boosted the total park areas from about 15,000,000 acres to 22,000,000 acres.

In accepting the resignation, Secretary Ickes praised Cammerer's work in supervising "the greatest growth of the National Park Service in any period of its history," and told him "your most outstanding achievements were the creation of the Great Smokies National Park and the Shenandoah National Park."

Besides his job of running the national parks, Cammerer has served as Federal representative on several local planning commissions, including the Alley Dwelling Authority, District Zoning Commission, National Capital Park and Planning Commission and others.

Born in a sod house in Arapahoe, Nebr., Cammerer entered Government service as a clerk in the Treasury Department in 1904, and in six years rose from a job in the cash room to the post of Assistant Secretary. He was a member of the National Fine Arts Commission from 1910 until he transferred to the Park Service in 1919.

A driving worker, Cammerer in his first five years as director put in nearly an extra year in overtime, took less than a month of leave. His health broke in May last year, and he was confined to bed for several months.

His successor is a native of Berkeley, Calif., graduate and former faculty member of the University of California and a veteran of the World War Air Service. He has served as land acquisition officer for the California State Park Commission, and secretary of the Save the Redwoods League.

Senate rejection of a mandatory 10 per cent economy program for nondefense activities yesterday was applauded by employe representatives, and the United Federal Workers announced that an economy protest rally, at 8 p. m. tonight in the old Interior Auditorium, will be billed as a victory meeting.

Jacob Baker, UFWA president, said employe morale would "soar" as a result of the Senate's action.

Secretary Ickes' inner defense council held its first meeting yesterday to begin studying reports from bureau chiefs about how their units are prepared to aid the national defense program.

The council will draft an over-all report for Ickes next week, according to Walton Onslow, council secretary.

Jobs: More engineers are the latest need of the defense program, and the Civil Service Commission has opened "until further notice" an examination for the jobs. The openings are for junior engineers, with experience in aeronautical, naval architecture or marine engineering, and the salary is $2,000 a year.

Other new examinations include:

Advanced apprentice engraver, $3.85 a day; Bureau of Engraving and Printing; assistant scientific aid, with training in chemistry, physics, cotton textile technology or fabric testing, $1,620 a year; construction cost auditor, three grades with salaries from $2,600 to $3,800, Maritime Commission; furniture designer, $3,800, Federal Prison Industries; principal librarian, $5,600, and librarian, $3,800, Agriculture Department.

Invalid Woman Saved From Home in Fire

Quick action by a roomer yesterday probably saved the life of Mrs. Mary Torino, 33-year-old convalescent, who was trapped in bed when fire broke out in a chair in her room at 100 Eighth street northeast.

Harvey Miller, who lives in a basement apartment, noticed smoke coming from the Torino apartment on the first floor and turned in an alarm. Mrs. Torino, overcome by smoke, was carried to safety, and was quickly revived by a doctor from Casualty Hospital. The blaze, in an overstuffed chair, was prevented from spreading.

Mrs. Torino was given first aid and taken to Gallinger Hospital. Doctors said she was recovering from a recent operation.

Jury Acquits Driver In Piperno Death

A coroner's jury yesterday decided the traffic death of Ralph Piperno, 60, of 208 Maryland avenue northeast, who died at Casualty Hospital Monday, was accidental.

The verdict acquitted Meyer Mehlman, 39, of 1001 North Carolina avenue southeast, driver of the automobile which struck Piperno at Pennsylvania and North Carolina avenues southeast, Sunday. The victim suffered a skull fracture.

"Station PDS Presents," broadcast by Lee Everett from the Peoples Drug stores studio, Eleventh and G streets northwest, is presented each week-day morning from 7:30 to 8:30 over Station WMAL, by Peoples Drug Stores in cooperation with The Washington Post. D. C. Doctors to Direct Moving of Headquarters

Two District doctors will have charge of details incident to moving the headquarters of the International College of Surgeons from Geneva to Washington for the duration of the war, it was disclosed yesterday.

The United States chapter and the governing council of the college decided on the action at a meeting in Philadelphia Sunday.

Dr. Custis Lee Hall and Dr. George Tribble, only Washington members of the college, will incorporate the organization under District laws and establish the headquarters here after the legal matters have been settled. Dr. Hall said yesterday offices would not be selected "for some time."

Britain to Ship Prisoners of War And Enemy Aliens to Canada

Governor General Athlone Greeted Simply at Halifax

By the Associated Press

Ottawa, June 19.—Canada has agreed to accept responsibility for interned aliens and German prisoners of war from Great Britain, Prime Minister Mackenzie King told the House of Commons today.

The British government, he said, asked that aliens and German prisoners be accepted in Canada as well as, but in preference to, evacuated British children because of their potential danger to the United Kingdom.

The Canadian government was attempting to meet the British government's wishes in the order of their preference and arrangements were being made for the shipment of the prisoners to Canada and their concentration and custody here, King said.

Athlone Arrives at Halifax

By the Associated Press

Halifax, June 19.—The Earl of Athlone, his secret voyage to Canada completed and his simple welcoming over, rode by special train toward Ottawa tonight to be sworn in as Canada's sixteenth governor-general.

After a reception that had no parallel in its simplicity, the earl and his lady, the Princess Alice, headed toward the national capital for the installation, little more than an hour after touching Canadian soil.

War's stress cut the traditional brilliant ceremony to the bare matter of a few handclasps and salutations.

Not until the train had rolled well out of the city was the public told a governor-general had landed to take up his commission.

The new governor-general, Alexander Augustus Frederick William Alfred George Cambridge, who was created first Earl of Athlone in 1917, came to Canada belatedly to take up an office he forsook at the outbreak of the last war. Then, he was appointed governor-general but went instead on active service.

Bullitt in Paris Is Incommunicado; Hull Annoyed

Copyright by New York Times

William C. Bullitt, the American Ambassador to France who elected to remain in Paris when the French government fled, is incommunicado and has become useless as a source of information, according to reports that are not denied by the State Department.

His functions, in consequence, are being performed by Anthony J. Drexel Biddle, jr., Ambassador to Poland, who followed that government to France and who has gone to Bordeaux where he is in touch with the French government and reporting to the State Department.

The situation, according to the reports, is of Bullitt's own choosing, not because of any bars the Germans have erected around him. In fact, it is said that Secretary of State Hull directed him to follow the French government when it fled to Tours and then to Bordeaux, and that the Ambassador refused. While this may have been heroic, it is said, it served no useful purpose and Hull is represented as being thoroughly annoyed.

2d Capital Man Given Life Term In Philadelphia

Philadelphia, June 19 (AP).—Two men who admitted killing a 61-year-old housekeeper during an unsuccessful robbery attempt five years ago were sentenced today to life imprisonment.

Judge Flood imposed the sentences on Santo Ruggeri, 31, of Astoria, Long Island, N. Y., and John A. Lagana, 1, of Washington, with the comment "there is no evidence showing they intended to kill the aged woman, but a life has been taken during the perpetration of a robbery."

Ruggeri and Lagana pleaded guilty to binding and gagging Miss Winifred Agnes Flannery, housekeeper for Lieut. Comdr. John S. Morrison, retired U. S. Naval officer, and placing her on a bed with a pillow case over her face. Miss Flannery, died from strangulation.

A third man, Guiseppe Guida, also of Washington, was convicted last week of first-degree murder with a recommendation of life imprisonment for his part in the slaying, while a woman, Mrs. Effie Hattie Smith, 59, former proprietress of fashionable Philadelphia and Washington tearooms, is awiting trial on a murder charge.

Traffic Bottleneck On Thirteenth St. To Be Removed

A traffic bottleneck on Thirteenth street between Monroe and Spring road, described as one of Washington's worst, will be eliminated under plans announced yesterday by Capt. H. C. Whitehurst, director of highways.

Objections of residents of the section, who believed demolition of houses and lawns would be necessary, have been met by a plan to widen the street to 38 feet only, Capt. Whitehurst said. It is now 30 feet wide. Other sections of the street measure 40 feet.

Work on the project, estimated to cost $116,000, will begin in 10 days, with half of the cost borne by the Federal Public Roads Administration. The job of removing several trees, to be replaced later, already is underway.

Sirkis Slaying Reenacted in Court By Accused Man

The fatal shooting of Herman Sirkis, 42, in a liquor store holdup February 26 was reenacted in District Court yesterday by Lathan Daniel, colored, 23, on trial for his life with John D. Butler, colored, 27, for the slaying.

With the death weapon, Daniel demonstrated how he fired over his shoulder when Sirkis started shooting as Daniel fled from the store at 4824 Dean avenue northeast, after the $35 robbery. Butler, alleged accomplice, also testified.

Justice F. Dickinson Letts twice denied motions that the jury be instructed to acquit the men. The Government contended Daniel fired the shot deliberately. Daniel declared he did not intend to kill Sirkis.

British Coastal Towns Bombed, R. A. F. Hits Back at Nazi Cities

ters and industrial concentrations of northeastern Germany and the Rhineland Tuesday night.

No word was available yet as to the result of the last night's British raids, if there were any.

Just as the first German raid followed Churchill's warning in Commons, the second raid came on the heels of a warning by Alfred Duff Cooper, minister of information that "bombardment and invasion of this island will be the next phase of the war."

Island Is Confident

But with the British expeditionary force—veterans of the Flanders battle and of the retreat from the Somme to the Loire—back home, and with Lord Beaverbrook's statement that Britain now has more planes than she had on May 10, when the German invasion of the Lowlands started, Britons kept their confidence.

Duff Cooper told them that with supplies from the United States and South America available, Britain had an "inexhaustible source" which made it necessary only to hold off the invader for a few months before the tide would turn in her favor.

"We know," he said, "that Hitler has risked all in his great effort to obtain a swift victory. We know that he cannot face a long war. We can face it and we shall face it if we have to with confidence."

Britain's search for guns—she has the men—went far afield.

Parliament was told the government is studying purchase of tanks, guns, airplanes and other war weapons from Soviet Russia, Germany's "paper partner."

Already, Britain has given America virtual blank check for munitions, even of World War vintage.

R. A. F. Ranges Far

Britain heard with enthusiasm that the far-reaching R. A. F. on Monday night "heavily attacked" objectives of Bremen, Hamburg, Frankfort, Essen, Castrop, Sterkrade and Hanover.

At Bremen alone, an Air Ministry communique said, 250 bombs were dropped within ten minutes.

The raids were the second at some of the German towns within 48 hours.

[DNB, German news agency, said British fliers bombed a military hospital at Coblenz Monday night, injured three nurses and damaged an unoccupied wing of the building. Eighteen persons were said to have been killed in Allied air raids in which "only non-military objectives were hit."

[DNB also reported that the I. G. Farben synthetic gasoline plant in Misburg, a suburb of Hanover, was damaged badly.]

The British air industry said five of its own planes were missing—three after overnight attacks on German airdromes, two others after engagements with German squadrons over western France.

An enemy seaplane base at Den Helder on the Netherlands' coast also was reported attacked by British fliers who said they started large fires among hangars and buildings.

At home, military spokesmen said England stands ready for the next blow with an army better than ever trained in the methods of modern war from its experiences on European battlefields.

Fifty members of Parliament, representing all parties, drafted a program last night to enroll the whole population for defense, establish a special ministry to combat fifth columnists and raise a foreign legion.

The program will be presented in Commons at today's secret session.

The program embraces:

Shifting all land defense to the war office.

Division of the entire population into armed forces and others, the latter to be subdivided into producers, who would be kept at regular jobs, and nonproducers, who would be subjected to immediate call up.

Shifting of "noneffectives" to the Dominions or American countries.

A nation-wide system of local defense organizations, provided with submachine guns, grenades and other weapons obtainable.

Roosevelt's Plan for Youth Training Wins Favor in District; Survey Shows Sentiment for Compulsory Military Schooling

Educator Considers Possibility of Industry Training Workmen

President Roosevelt's proposal for universal Government training for America's youth meets with the approval of a large majority of residents of Washington and its suburbs, a Post survey of representative citizens disclosed yesterday.

With few exceptions, persons queried gave their unqualified indorsement to the program which, the President emphasized, is aimed chiefly at non-military training. In many cases, civic leaders went so far as to call for compulsory military training.

A few, like Harry N. Stull, president of the Federation of Citizens Associations, asked for more information on the plan.

While citing the necessity for trained personnel behind the lines in war time, Ralph I. Williams, assistant dean of men at the University of Maryland asked whether it would not be possible for industry to train workmen rather than the Government. Compulsory one-year training would interrupt the college education of many youths, he declared.

Indorse Proposal

Nicholas Orem, Prince Georges County school superintendent, and Jack Shapiro, president of the Maryland Park Citizens Association, indorsed the idea.

"The time is bound to come when the Government will take over the entire process of education," Orem said.

In Montgomery County, Mrs. Jacob Taylor, Kensington, secretary of the County Republican Women's Clubs, declared the program a "step toward regimentation." Laurence Mosier, 18 president of the Bethesda-Chevy Chase High School Student Government Association, declared:

"I would be in favor of a non-combatant type of military training. A plan like the President's might be a step to war."

In Alexandria, City Manager Carl Budwesky declared that strength will be America's "surest guarantee of peace," while Ervin A. Tappan, Government construction engineer, called for universal service of all residents of the United States and possessions.

Other Comments

Sefton Darr, former president of the District Bar Association—"I think it is an excellent plan. I'm 1,000 per cent for it. If I had a boy or 10 boys I would want them all to have Army experience, not because I want them to go to war, but so that if the occasion arose for them to defend this country they hood and training to do so. I have had experience in the matter. When I was about 22 I served two years in the Army and it was an enormous physical benefit to me, taught me lessons of discipline, responsibility and self-reliance which have been invaluable to me all my life."

Rabbi Norman Gerstenfeld, of the Washington Hebrew Congregation—"I am heartily in favor of the program. I think it would be good for the bodies and the souls of our young citizens."

Dr. W. L. Darby, executive secretary of the Washington Federation of Churches—"I would regret to see the necessity for conscription, but if its imperative, it should be done. I wish some other plan, not requiring compulsion, could have been worked out."

Believes Action Wise

The Very Rev. Noble C. Powell, dean of Washington Cathedral—"It seems to be the wise and proper action to take."

Approval of the proposal also came from Dr. John Bailey Kelly, pastor of the Georgetown Presbyterian Church; Dr. Rufus W. Weaver, executive secretary of the District Baptist Convention; Robert D. Hagner, former Montgomery County commissioner; Charles Orme, Montgomery County chief of police; Mrs. Ralph A. Wells, president of the Women's Democratic Clubs of Montgomery County; William A. Carson, president of the Prince Georges County board; Guy Curtis, commander Thomas N. Fenwick Post, Veterans of Foreign Wars, Hyattsville; Charles R. Fenwick, Arlington member of the Virginia general assembly; Mrs. Gladys Monroe, Arlington P.-T. A. worker; William D. Medley, Virginia State senator; Frank L. Ball, former Virginia senator; Lawrence Michael, Arlington real estate man; Robert D. Graham, president of the Fairfax Rotary Club, and James Keith, of the Fairfax Bar Association.

Britain to Send 20,000 Children to Dominions For Safekeeping as Bombings Increase

Copyright by New York Times

London, June 19.—The British government, convinced that the Battle of Great Britain has begun, disclosed the details tonight of an "urgent" scheme to ship about 20,000 school children to the Dominions of Canada, Australia, New Zealand and South Africa.

The first shiploads of these are expected to be convoyed to Canada in about two weeks.

Clement Attlee, lord privy seal, introduced the scheme to the House of Commons this afternoon as "a matter of the utmost urgency." Negotiations are now being carried on with Dominion governments, and in complete confidence that the official British plan will be accepted by these governments, officials here today started handling hundreds of applications from parents in eastern England, many of whose homes are in the area raided by German bombers last night.

Under the scheme, which already has been approved by the war cabinet, only children between the ages of 5 and 16 will be sent abroad. If they now attend "public" schools, they will be asked to pay their steamship passage, but if they attend state-aided schools they will be shipped to their new sanctuary free of charge and brought back free at the end of the war.

Every attempt, it is emphasized here, will be made to assure that children evacuated both to the United States and to the Dominions will represent an average cross-section of British children. All will be physically fit, no "problem children" will be sent and none will be accompanied under the scheme by their parents, except, perhaps, in the case of a family where the father has been killed in the war.

The most careful plans are being laid to assure the safety of these children in crossing the seas, which are now becoming more dangerous all the time. As a result of conversations between the Ministry of Shipping and the Admiralty, it is understood that all refugee ships will be convoyed at least part of the way, and in some cases the German and Italian governments may be asked to provide safe passage. The British government would, of course, guarantee that these ships would carry no contraband but only children, their nurses and doctors, and crews.

Parents who are able to pay for the upkeep of their children abroad will be asked to do so as generously as possible, but to assure that poor people are not handicapped the minimum rate of pay will be set very low.

Already Canada is asking for 10,000, Australia for 5,000, New Zealand for 2,500, South Africa for "several thousand."

Premature estimates in the British press say 200,000 children could be moved. Informed persons say it is not anticipated that any such number could be transferred quickly, in view of the war's demand on ships.

Airline Denied Right to Acquire Control of Rival

The Civil Aeronautics Authority refused yesterday to permit United Airlines Transport Corporation to acquire control of Western Air Express Corporation. Interchange of sleeper plane equipment between the two companies on a leasing basis was authorized, however.

Regarding the acquisition proposal, the CAA said:

"The preponderance which approval of the application in this case would give to United in the West Coast region would result in a condition which would not be best suited to the encouragement and development in that region of a system of air transportation properly adapted to the present and future needs of the foreign and domestic commerce of the United States, of the Postal Service and of the national defense."

Attorney General Opposes Bill to Deport Harry Bridges

'Emphatic Disapproval' Voiced in Letter To Sen. Russell; U. S. Tightens Control Of Amateur and Professional Radiomen

By the Associated Press

Attorney General Jackson expressed "emphatic disapproval" yesterday of a bill for the deportation of Harry Bridges, West Coast C. I. O. leader.

In a letter to Senator Russell (Democrat), of Georgia, Jackson said if the bill, which the House approved by an overwhelming vote, were to become law it would be "an historical departure from an unbroken American practice and tradition."

Meanwhile, approximately 100,000 radio operators were ordered by the Federal Communications Commission to submit proof of their citizenship.

Previous commission orders forbade amateurs to communicate with foreign countries, sharply curtailed activities of mobile transmitters, and ordered ship and other operators not to carry on unnecessary conversations.

Fingerprints Demanded

Yesterday's decree applies to all operators, both amateur and commercial. It calls on them to file proof in the form of affidavits, fingerprints, and photographs before August 15, and requires information as to the nationality of immediate relatives, time spent by the applicant outside of the United States, and service with this or any foreign government.

The Bridges deportation bill was introduced by Representative Allen (Democrat), of Louisiana. It is designed solely to bring about deportation of Bridges, who was cleared of communism charges by Dean James M. Landis, of the Harvard Law School, who acted for the Labor Department.

Russell asked Jackson's views on the measure.

"It would be the first time," the Attorney General replied, "that Congress, without changing the general law, simply suspended all laws which protect a named individual and directed the Attorney General to disregard and forthwith to deport 'notwithstanding any other provision of law.'

"And it would be the first time since the alien and sedition laws a century and a half ago that any law would provide for deportation without a hearing and without, indeed, the slightest pretense toward giving the accused what our Nation has long known as 'due process of law.'"

Taylor's Illness Called Serious

Rome, June 19 (AP).—Attendants described the condition of Myron C. Taylor, President Roosevelt's representative to the Vatican, as serious tonight, but not alarming.

His illness, laid partly to overwork, has kept Taylor at his villa in Florence, confined to bed most of the time.

Unable to maintain personal contact with the Vatican, he has carried on through a secretary.

Not So Hot

Delegates to the American Society of Heating and Ventilating Engineers convention, some of whom have submitted bids for the project, yesterday heard the Government's plan to provide a heating system for the Washington Monument held up to ridicule.

"It's the height of asininity," declared Thomas H. Urdahl, Washington engineer, reporting the consensus of a committee considering the project. Conferees meeting at the Wardman Park Hotel expressed the opinion that a heating system, estimated to cost $30,000 or $40,000, would be a good thing—to forget.

But There Was a Holdup

Walter A. Sellers, operator of a gas station at Second and H streets northeast, answered, "No, not that I know of" yesterday when an anonymous telephone voice queried: "Wasn't there a holdup around there a few minutes ago?"

Later Sellers reached for his wallet in the pocket of his pants hanging on the office wall. The wallet was gone and with it a $70 check, $45 in cash and his driver's permit.

Japanese Political Parties Demand Seizure of French Indo-China

Tokyo Voices Her 'Concern' To the Axis

Observers Believe Hitler May Offer Colony to Nippon

By the Associated Press

Tokyo (Thursday), June 20.—Powerful political factions urged the Japanese government today to turn to southeastern Asia and even occupy "protectively" the rich French possession of Indo-China, in anticipation of collapse of the French Empire.

Already the government, timing its action to coincide with discussion of the French armistice terms, was reported reliably to have dropped a reminder in Berlin and Rome of its "concern" over Indo-China.

This reminder, it was understood, was accompanied by recollection of the friendly relations between the three powers.

Japan's Aims Uncertain

It is not known whether Japan is asking the Axis powers for a continuance of the status quo in the 281,000 square miles of Indo-China, or desires a "blank check" from Germany and Italy, to use as she will. Japan is linked to the Axis powers by an anti-communist pact.

When Japan asked Germany about the Dutch East Indies, Germany said she was "uninterested" in the problem, and some people interpreted that as an invitation to Japan to take any action she desired.

At any rate, the Tohokai, influential political party, urged the government to occupy Indo-China: First, because it is a major channel of munitions supply for the Chinese central government, Japan's Asiatic enemy, and second because the collapse of the French government allegedly casts Indo-China loose without control.

The majority faction of the Seiyukai another strong political group, likewise urged Japan to settle various impending problems in the south and "liquidate" what has happened in the past.

France Reassures Japan

Copyright by New York Times

Tokio, June 19.—The French government has given Japan firm assurances that transportation of gasoline and American trucks to Chiang Kai-shek through Indo-China has been absolutely forbidden. According to French authorities these are the only commodities which have been reaching Chungking via Indo-China.

The Japanese press, however, continues to assert that primary munitions including antiaircraft guns, hand grenades, machine guns, rifles and field guns were passing into China through the French territory as recently as April.

Observers now believe Hitler may offer Japan Indo-China as a colony.

From Japan's viewpoint there are objections to this method. It would expose Japan as being no better than other European intruders who fatten on China and would stiffen Chinese resistance to Japan's peace move. Or Hitler may offer to restore Indo-China to China which for that purpose would be represented by Wang Chingwei for the Japanese government. This method would reinforce Japan's efforts to induce the Chinese people to accept her peace terms.

Tientsin Pact Signed

The spot which has so virulently infected Anglo-Japanese relations disappeared today when British Ambassador Sir Roland Craigie and Prime Minister Arita formally signed the Tientsin agreement.

The barriers will be opened tomorrow, though as that is technically a military question it is not included in the agreement.

A silver agreement follows the lines already foreshadowed and other provisions embody the actual practice to follow the Craigie-Arita agreement of last year. The delay was owing to the British government's policy of obtaining the Chungking government's consent. This has now been given and will be announced by Chungking in a statement consenting to allocation of 100,000 pounds for relief and holding Britain to trusteeship for the remainder.

The official communique states that detailed arrangements have been made for cooperation and suppression of terrorists and activities prejudicial to the security of Japanese forces.

The British municipal council undertakes not to obstruct the circulation of federal reserve currency. The latter clause places China's national currency and the Japanese sponsored currency on an equal footing.

100-Ton Tank Designed for U. S.

Atlanta, June 19 (AP).—The Atlanta Constitution says plans for a 100-ton tank, more deadly than anything yet designed in mechanical warfare, have been submitted to the United States War Department by a Georgia Tech military engineer.

The paper says plans and specifications for the proposed tank, described as a "trench on wheels," were prepared by Maj. A. A. Case, associate superintendent of shops. The paper said the tank would be armed with 75-millimeter cannon, and would carry defensive armor from five to six inches thick. Its speed was estimated at "just equal to that of the 80-ton German tanks.

Germans Take 3 Fortress Cities

from Marseille and the Mediterranean.

(A German bulletin heard in New York by N. B. C. said Nazi mechanized troops already had reached Lyon.)

The high command reported three more fortress cities in the Maginot Line defenses had been captured.

Strasbourg, bulwark on the Rhine opposite Kehl, fell, and the swastika fluttered from the city's impressive cathedral.

Directly west of Strasbourg on the inner side of the Maginot Line the Germans took Toul and Luneville, both key fortresses. They lie on either side of Nancy, which the high command reported seized earlier today.

Authorized sources denied point-blank the five-point peace conditions outlined by the newspaper Popolo Di Roma and added that any other such erroneous publications regarding the Munich agreement were "unauthorized combinations."

The "great significance" of steps toward the capitulation of France was cited as a reason for secrecy on Germany's part.

But the mood of the Nazis was clear in press comment.

"France won't escape atonement," the Berliner Borsenzeitung bannerlined. "It must bear the consequences of defeat and its politics."

The authoritative editorial service, Dienst aus Deutschland, emphasized the significance from the German point of view of steps toward French capitulation.

"And Now for England"

"It cannot be doubted," it said, "that on the German side no reprisal tendencies exist, that on the contrary a historical settlement with our opponent should be undertaken with complete calmness—a settlement in which not only the necessities for continued warfare against England but all questions ensuring the future peace of Europe should be considered."

An indication of the direction in which this "continued warfare against England" may develop was seen in the high command's announcement that German battle planes overnight bombarded and set afire oil tanks on the Thames Estuary and raided "numerous British airports."

"And now for England!" said Hitler's newspaper, the Volkischer Beobachter.

Sinking of Liner Off New Zealand Blamed on Mine

Copyright by New York Times

London, June 19.—Sinking of the 13,415-ton Canadian-Australian liner Niagara by an "enemy mine" off New Zealand brought a sharp reminder to London that no seas can now be regarded as safe.

In the belief that the destruction of the Admiral Graf Spee and its accompanying vessels had cleared the southern seas of German raiders, the British had allowed first-class vessels considerable freedom of movement in Australasian waters. The appearance of mines on the "ferry" route between Australia and New Zealand, however, creates a serious problem for the Allied fleets engaged in enforcing the blockade.

The sinking of the Niagara means the detachment of units from the already overstrained fleet to protect routes previously deemed safe.

French Reported Balking at Hitler's Terms

planes were forced down in Spanish territory.

(France's fleet remains "in fullest coordination" with the British fleet, according to the French spokesman, the United Press said.

(The United States Army Intelligence was reported checking unconfirmed information that the French government was being transferred to Tunisia.

(The United Press quoted an "official French spokesman" as saying the Petain government may yet accept Britain's proposal for a "solemn union" if the German terms were found to be "shameful." The British plan and the German terms, he said, "are receiving equal consideration" and at that time "no decision has been reached on either matter.")

The possibility that some Frenchmen, at least, might be prepared to continue resistance away from the homeland if they felt it was made necessary by the Axis terms was seen in a declaration over the French radio that France's maritime communications had been assured in the Western Mediterranean.

On the other hand, the French government publicly repudiated a recent cabinet member for having urged from London a continuance of resistance against Germany.

Gen. De Gaulle, the undersecretary for national defense in the Reynaud war cabinet which resigned Sunday, was taken to task specifically by Interior Minister Charles Pomaret, for having advocated in a London broadcast last night a Franco-British union, with the industrial help of the United States, "to crush our enemies."

Pomaret said De Gaulle is not qualified to make public announcements, and had been ordered to return to France from London.

The French armies, still in the field, reported German plunges southward through Brittany in the direction of Nantes, at the mouth of the Loire River—occupation of which could cut off lower English Channel ports like Brest and St. Nazaire.

South of the Loire, Nazis drove below Tours to the River Cher and still farther east approached Lyon, Ronne and Amberieu.

Attacks pressed toward the Channel port of Saint Malo on the north coast of Brittany and south and west toward Nantes. Advance German columns moving west from the region of Angers were reported within about 20 miles of Nantes.

There has been no letup in the determined Nazi drive, no halt in the slow withdrawal of weary French armies.

Latest German pushes apparently were aimed at a quick cleanup of France's English Channel coast, and the cutting off of France's third city, Lyon.

Two strong German columns converged on Lyon—one from the Swiss frontier to the northeast, the other past Nevers, to the northwest.

Along the Swiss frontier, the French said, the battlefront is too confused for a clear picture of what has happened. Resistance there was described as probably "very weak." (Swiss reports, however, indicated the German thrust there showed signs of exhaustion.)

In general, the French were fighting in an attempt to pull their forces together as they were driven southward toward the Mediterranean, the Pyrenees border of Spain and the Atlantic.

They still had about half of their territory in which to fight, and a military commentator tonight said that although the armies were fighting as isolated groups, "each, nevertheless, has conserved its cohesion of maneuver in retreat."

The French said their weary troops had delivered a "new battle" against the enemy on the Middle Loire before withdrawing "on order."

Maginot Troops Fight On

Maginot troops which had not yet escaped from the German jaws in Lorraine were described as forming square formations, which were revived in Flanders, to beat off mechanized and motorized enemies attacking them from east, north and west. These troops were attempting to cut their way through to join main armies to the south.

In the region west of the Vosges other French troops were fighting southward, foot by foot.

(Dispatches from Switzerland said the position of the French in the upper Rhone Valley, defending Lyon, appeared to be improving each hour, as the weary command whipped battered units into order and bolstered them with fresh troops from Africa or the Maginot Line.)

The French army of the Alps, it was reported, still had not been attacked by Germans or Italians.

Tiring German Army 20 Miles From Lyon and Slowing Down

By the Associated Press

Geneva, Switzerland, June 19.—German mechanized armies, taxed by cross-country dashes but supported by uncontested air superiority, were reported tonight to have sent advanced elements down the Ain Valley to within 20 miles of Lyon.

(A German radio broadcast, picked up by N. B. C., said the Germans had "reached" Lyon, some 200 miles north of Marseille and the Mediterranean.)

Reports brought by refugees nevertheless indicated the possibility that the German war machine was so near exhaustion that the French might successfully defend Lyon, their third largest city, a manufacturing center whose normal population is about 570,000.

The defense of Lyon fell, in part, to comparatively fresh troops from the now virtually abandoned Maginot Line. The last skeleton garrisons of the great fortresses on the Rhine north of Basel withdrew today.

Forts Fire Last Volleys

The forts of St. Louis, Hunique, Village Neuf and Rosenau fired their last volleys at German positions in Baden at 2:45 a. m. and then their garrisons retreated west toward Belfort. The fort at Belfort, guarding the Burgundian gate, apparently still was manned, however, for sounds of artillery and machinegun fire could be heard from that region.

From farther north along the Rhine, the faint sound of artillery fire indicated that French fortress troops in the Vosges Maginot Line still are holding out behind Colmar.

The German thrust into the Rhone Valley seemed to be a matter of life or death for what was left of France, for a German grip on the Rhone would mean cutting off France's Alpine army.

The Alpine line is composed of mountain forts designed only to resist troops coming from Italy.

French Numerically Superior

The French, held the numerical superiority with land forces and had plenty of small arms. This, combined with a depletion of Germany's mechanized strength in the long thrusts through France, might halt the German advance.

But the Germans still held the whiphand in the air. Making up for the lack of tanks and armored cars which were reported worn out and abandoned, German bombers dived within a few hundred yards of improvised French barricades, splattering them with bombs and machine-gunning masses of French troops.

There was no indication that armored units had been able to pierce the line which former Maginot fortress troops were holding north of Bellegrade and west of Geneva.

Dynamite Checks Nazis

Apparently small French forces, sniping with small arms and using dynamite checked German progress down from St. Claude, 25 miles northwest of Geneva, toward Bellegrade. Attempts to smash into Bellegrade from the west were stopped at Nantua, barely 10 miles away.

Bellegarde itself is of great importance if the Germans expect to shove down to the Italian border to join Mussolini's troops in the Alps. The town is a sentinel west of the bulge of Switzerland at Geneva into France just north of the French-Italian border.

Farther north, German motorized advances cut off more French territory—but left it far from conquered.

The Swiss frontier with Lower Alsace, France, was a deserted countryside. In dozens of little towns there was not a soldier, not a civilian, hardly a farm animal left behind.

Le Locle, on the French-Swiss Frontier, June 19 (AP).—Two thousand French soldiers, including a general, stumbled wearily across Col des Roches ridge into neutral Switzerland today.

They surrendered to Swiss army border guards, and without a murmur many fell exhausted to sleep on the grass.

The steady flow of refugees continued across this part of the Jura frontier—the old and the young in the dispirited masses.

Break Likely If Germans Are Deported

Fear Montevideo May Be Forced to Suspend Campaign

Copyright by New York Times

Montevideo, June 19.—Germany is exerting tremendous political and economic pressure on the Uruguayan government to halt what Berlin calls an unfriendly anti-German campaign, and has threatened to break off diplomatic relations if any Nazi leaders are deported.

Fear is expressed here that this pressure will force the Uruguayan government to release Nazi leaders now under arrest and drop its plans for energetic measures against Nazi organizations.

The German government presented a strong diplomatic protest to the Uruguayan government Monday through German Minister Otto Langmann, demanding immediate cessation of "unfriendly agitation" against Germany. This protest is believed to have been the cause of the government's action in urging the Chamber of Deputies to go into secret session Monday afternoon to receive a report of its investigating committee.

Would Leave at Once

Minister of Interior Manuel Tiscornia told last night's secret session of the Chamber of Deputies that Julius Dalldorf, the "Little Fuehrer for Uruguay," had told him that if Dalldorf or other Nazi leaders were deported the German minister would ask for his passports and leave the country immediately. Since Dalldorf is a member of the legation staff as press attache it is taken for granted that this message was sent by Langmann.

Despite the government's efforts to investigating committee's report from reaching the public, the Chamber voted to issue a stenographic record of the secret sessions to newspapers.

A plot for military seizure of Uruguay, existence in the German colony here of Nazi military motorized groups operating more than 100 motorcycles, and the fact that the Nazis attribute tremendous importance to Uruguay as a base for operations in South America are three of the outstanding conclusions of the investigating committee.

The committee proved alarming Nazi penetration in Uruguayan government offices, either by placing actual Nazi members in high positions or controlling Uruguayans who occupy positions of responsibility.

Propaganda Operations

The committee also proved surprising ramifications of Nazi propaganda operations by newspapers, radio, movies and even use of Uruguayan government buildings for ropaganda purposes. The investigation disclosed alarming political propaganda among farm laborers, also in schools and colleges. Documents were presented proving the existence of storm troops, Gestapo and the military training of young Germans, including the handling of gliders, parachutes and motorcycles.

The committee has proved that German cultural organizations throughout Uruguay are merely political units; that several Uruguayan writers are in Nazi pay; and that Nazi gliders and parachute jumpers were using Uruguyan military airfields for their practice.

An efficient espionage organization was found operating throughout the country photographing and mapping military points.

Documents submitted to Congress proved that the German legation in Montevideo takes an active part in political activities of the Nazi party and that it imports radio sets in large quantities in diplomatic pouches for free distribution to German schools, clubs and other organizations.

The legation also was proved to take a active part in bribing Uruguayan newspapers for propaganda purposes.

Despite all this, the strong pressure of the German government is causing Uruguay to take a hesitant and vacillating attitude which threatens a political victory for Germany.

The government's hesitant and vacillating attitude has been plainly evidenced by its contradictory action in the last few days.

Until Monday the Interior Minister denied that there was any importance attached to Nazi activities in Uruguay. Last night at the secret session he presented a report from his under-secretary confirming charges made in the report of the investigating committee. The chief of the Bureau of Investigation of the Police Department has steadily denied Nazi plans were of any importance. Newspapers this morning announced his arrest.

The arrival here of the American naval ship Quincy tomorrow morning, is taken for granted throughout South America as evidence that the United States is ready to help South American nations if necessary.

Foreign Minister Alberto Guani has frequently expressed satisfaction of the Uruguayan government that the cruiser is coming. Yet this morning the foreign minister issued a statement that the voyage of the Quincy has no Pan-American political significance.

Simultaneously with this political pressure German business houses are assuring their customers that German trade will be normal again within six months.

Senate Approves Defense Taxes

face the House conferees.

Previously the Senate beat back every effort to attach an economy rider to the tax bill, finally throwing out altogether the emasculated Byrd amendment requesting the President to make a 10 per cent cut in Federal nondefense expenditures.

Two Million Taxpayers Added

As it stands, the bill would raise $1,007,000,000 in revenue by increased excise and income levies, as well as the addition of over 2,000,000 taxpayers to the rolls. The proposed new individual and corporation income taxes, yielding about a third of the total, would be intended as permanent revisions of the law, while there is a five-year limitation on the other imposts.

The increase of the debt limit to $49,000,000,000 carries with it authorization for $4,000,000,000 in new securities to help pay for this year's national defense program. These obligations, which are to be paid for by the new taxes, will be amortized in five years.

Senator LaFollette's amendment, which now has to run the gantlet of a Senate-House conference, would skim off some of the profits that might be made in a wartime boom. After allowing an exemption of $2,000 plus an 8 per cent return on invested capital, the proposal would place a 20 per cent tax on profits up to 20 per cent of invested capital, and a 40 per cent tax on income above that level. It is intended as permanent law.

Harrison Foresees New Bill

Prior to passage of the LaFollette amendment, Senator Harrison informed critics of the bill who were denouncing it as "totally inadequate" that he recognized the need of an excess profits tax but that Treasury officials claimed it would take "two months" before a satisfactory one could be framed.

Asserting that "I do not think there is any doubt that further taxes must be raised," Harrison promised that he would attempt to start work on a new tax bill "immediately."

He vainly pleaded for defeat of the LaFollette proposal on the grounds that the pending bill should be passed with the least possible delay and that an excess profits levy free from "loopholes" could still be adopted before January 1.

Predicting that Congress would recess Saturday but would not adjourn, Senator Harrison suggested that the House Ways and Means Committee, where all new tax legislation must originate, begin work at once. Nevertheless, he maintained that the pending measure was "a pretty good bill," and pointed out that it involved "the biggest peacetime increase in taxes in the history of this country."

Complete Revision Desired

On the adjournment question, it appeared likely yesterday that the Democratic leadership, clearly unable to muster enough strength to terminate the session Saturday, might succeed in recessing until early August.

If Congress does meet in the summer, it would be possible that the complete revision of the tax structure which is apparently desired on every side might actually become law late this year or early in the next session—thus vitiating most of the tax schedules in the present bill.

The pending measure, Senator Byrd (Democrat), of Virginia, said yesterday, would only yield $196,000,000 by January 1 anyway, as the income levies will not be payable until March.

The attempts of the economy bloc to write a mandatory reduction of nondefense expenditures into the tax bill collapsed after the Senate turned down proposals of Senator O'Mahoney (Democrat), of Wyoming, to call back al the civil appropriation bill and reduce them by a total of $500,000,000, and of Senator Tydings (Democrat), of Maryland, requiring the President to slash 4 per cent from Federal expenditures.

Spain Smashes Plot, Seizes Arms Stores

Police Arrest 'Large Number' for Conspiracy 'Of Foreign Type'

Madrid, June 19.—Spanish police tonight announced a vast plot "affecting an extensive zone of our country," has been smashed by the arrest of a "large number of persons" and confiscation of large stores of arms, ammunition and explosives.

No further details were given, but it was stated the organization behind the plot was "of a foreign type."

Spain Claims Share in Spoils

By the Associated Press

Madrid, June 19.—Spain claimed tonight a share in any division of the spoils of war from France.

Responsible quarters said flatly that Spain's part in peace negotiations was "not just that of go-between" but the role of a nation which expected a voice in any territorial realignments.

Adolf Hitler and Benito Mussolini already have pledged Spain would have a voice, it was said.

The road to empire already laid out by Spain's Fascist government leads first to the south. Spokesmen have said Spain's "vital interests" in the Mediterranean require that sse be given control of the African coast across from the Ibernian Peninsula.

Gibraltar Wanted, Too

The press has said, too, that Spain should have from Britain control of Gibraltar, and should take over the little principality of Andorra in the Pyrenees on the French-Spanish frontire.

Meanwhile, through those mountains, a steady stream of refugees snails into Spain from France. Among these have been the former Empress Zita of Austria and her son, the Archduke Otto, pretender to the non-existant Austrian throne, and the three children of King Leopold III of Belgium. Many were headed for Portugal.

Windsors Reported in Spain

Madrid, June 19 (U.P.)—It was reported here without confirmation tonight that the Duke and Duchess of Windsor were among refugees who crossed the Spanish border from France today.

Contract Awarded To Build 3 Tankers

A contract for the construction of three national defense tankers was awarded to the Sun Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co., Chester, Pa., by the Maritime Commission.

Contracts previously had been let for 20 tankers. The shipbuilding company will receive about $2,620,000 each for construction of the tankers. The Maritime Commission will pay $308,000 toward the cost of each.

African Rifles Damage Outpost In Raid Against Italians

By the Associated Press

Nairobi, Kenya Colony, Africa, June 19.—A raid on the Italian Somaliland frontier by troops of the King George's African rifles, supported by the Southern Rhodesian contingent and the Royal Air Force, was reported today in a military communique.

Although full details were not available, the communique said, an Italian post was considerably damaged.

"The enemy was obviously surprised and later counter-attacked our troops who, after completing their task, withdrew over the border," the communique added. "Our reported casualties are two African ranks (enlisted men).

"On withdrawing, our troops were bombed by two Italian Caproni aircraft, but so far no damage whatsoever is reported.

"On the rest of the front all was quiet on Tuesday."

[Dispersal of a British armored column which attempted to penetrate Italian lines in East Africa allegedly under cover of the Italian flag was reported today by the Italian high command.

[The communique said Italian planes sank an enemy submarine and continued attacks on Allied air bases in East Africa, resulting in the burning of three planes.

[The Allies were reported to have bombed an East African farm village, killing three women and several children, and to have continued attacks on northern Italian cities but without causing casualties or serious damage.]

Submarine Attacked

Cairo, June 19 (AP).—An "entirely successful" dive-bombing attack on an Italian submarine in the Mediterranean was reported today by the British Royal Air Force.

An R. A. F. communique said a Blenheim bomber was sent out and dived on the submarine while two fighting planes machine-gunned the conning tower. Subsequent reports from naval craft said the attack was "entirely successful."

The communique added that in a British attack yesterday at Tessenei, Italian Eritrea, a hangar was hit and believed to have been destroyed. Raheita, also in Eritrea, was twice raided and bombed.

The southern Rhodesian air force carried out a "most successful" offensive and reconnaissance over southern Ethiopia, it was said.

Premier Ali Pasha Maher told the Chamber of Deputies tonight that some Egyptian forces have been withdrawn from the western frontier bordering Italian Libya.

The premiere said this was "to avoid an incident occurring before Parliament has time to act in the best interests of the country."

Egypt, the premier said, is fulfilling all her obligations and following a policy of complete support of Britain.

Two Imported 'Stars' To Make Capital Debuts

Dancer and Charger Highly Touted in 'Florian;' Some Vagrant Memories of Another Ballerina; This, That and the Other About the Theater

CURIOSITY IS WHETTED by the richly embroidered encomiums that are preceding one Irina Baronova to the Capital. Miss Baronova, it seems, is a personality new to the American cinema, who will be seen for the first time on a local screen when "Florian" opens tomorrow at Loew's Capitol Theater.

BELL

The shrinking violets intrusted with the Baronova build-up describe her modestly enough as "principal dancer of the Monte Carlo Ballet Russe, hailed throughout the world not only as the most beautiful ballerina, but the first legitimate successor to Pavlova."

It is that last crack that piques my interest in a peek at Irina.

Pavlova may not have been "the most beautiful ballerina," but there are few still living who will deny her right to be known as one of the world's greatest. Adeline Genee is the only one of her contemporaries who comes to mind as a possible threat to her preeminence. But a great dancer does not necessarily make a great screen artiste, Mr. Winfield Sheehan, producer of "Florian," to the contrary, notwithstanding. I trust Baronova's screen career may be more fortunate than Pavlova's—as it probably will be, the present perfection of film-making being what it is.

This all harks back to a blisteringly sun-shiny day, years ago, at Universal City, which is in California, when I stood on the sidelines with Lois Weber, the only female motion picture director of her day, and her husband-assistant, Phillips Smalley, and watched them put Mme. Anna Pavlova and an enormous supporting cast through their paces in "The Dumb Girl of Portici," ticketed to be a super-colossal "special." Months later, when the late Harry M. Crandall presented the picture as a "road show" attraction at the old Garrick Theater, what I saw was a super-colossal flopperoo. As a complete demonstration of everything a motion picture should not be, "The Dumb Girl of Portici" was a magnificent success. Mind you, I am speaking of "The Dumb Girl of Portici," not "Florian." But it just goes to show.

There is another new star in "Florian," too—and in the title role, at that. It is a Lippizan stallion of distinguished lineage. This column does not set itself up as a horse-breeders' handbook, but it seems pretty certain that Florian is the great-grandson of Conversano, a famous Hapsburg royal mount that recently died in Budapest at the honorable old equine age of 31. Florian was presented to Mme. Maria Jeritza (Mrs. Winfield Sheehan) by the Austrian government as a token of esteem for her work in the Vienna Imperial Opera.

In case you want to brush up on the lyrics—if you can find them—spray the throat and otherwise tune up to take your place among the immortals, old-time hits in Eileen Ritter's "Sing-a-Song-with-Mike" frolic, at the Earle, beginning tomorrow, will include "On a Sunday Afternoon," "K-K-K-Kathy," "Wait 'Til the Sun Shines, Nellie," "When You Wore a Tulip" and "There'll Be a Hot Time in the Old Town Tonight," the marching tune of the Spanish-American War, as all you kids will remember!

The Earle, by the bye, is now in direct competition with its own newsreels the newspaper headlines and the radio. It has posted a War News Bulletin Board, just to the right of the box office, on which news flashes are posted immediately they are received by the WJSV newsroom, eight floors up. Why not wisecracks and comic sayings, for "escape," instead?

The tenth edition of Phil Hayden's "Revue Intime," Washington's most pretentious, annual, scholastic entertainment, will be given in Studio House, out Massachusetts avenue way, tomorrow night at 8:30. An old trouper himself, Phil trains his charges for professional careers and his shows offer ample proof of his success. An advance printer's proof of the program is enough to knock your eye out, 30 skits and specialties being embraced in the two acts.

Famous Last-Words Note

Well, how goes the war?

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, June 19.

Jackie Cooper, who's graduating at Beverly High School this week, gets $4,000 a week, so he's been let off from the usual class prophecy about Jackie, so they're asking him to tell them how he did it. He's just bought Barbara Stanwyck's ranch in the valley for his mother . . . After running a rough cut of "Rhythm on the River," Oscar Levant got more laughs than they expected—which means he'll probably get more pictures. Mary Martin's terrific—as we expected.

HOPPER

Edgar Kennedy, whom we call "Slowburn," has been infested by house-to-house salesmen. So he's hung the following sign on his front porch: "I don't care what you have to say. And I shall defend unto death my right not to hear you say it. Edgar Voltaire Kennedy."

That pretty Frances Robinson, who's Joe E. Brown's leading lady in "So You Won't Talk," was under contract to Universal for more than a year without really getting a chance. She also played Lillian Gish at the age of four in "Orphans of the Storm." She's doing O. K. now—every man in town is asking for a date.

After joining the union so she could do the commercial on her husband's (Eddie Robinson's) "Big Town" air show, wife Gladys got $1 . . . Merle Oberon contributed her whole salary for the Lux show to the Red Cross.

It seems surprising, but they say Jimmy Cagney and Director Anatole Litvak are not getting along a-tall on "City for Conquest." The other day I heard that Cagney offered to step out in the alley, but Litvak would have none of it.

Smiley Burnette is digging a swimming pool in his back yard. Some of his pals dumped crankcase oil in it the night of the first day he dug. When Smiley started digging next morning, he really thought he'd struck oil.

Carol Stone, Fred's daughter, and last of the single Stones, will marry Robert McCahon, Boston blueblood architect, soon.

Bette Davis' mother leaves via station wagon for New England soon to tour antique shops in search of furnishings for Bette's Sugar Hill place in New Hampshire. Bette follows for a three months' vacation on completion of "The Letter."

I wonder if that $1,000,000 suit Charlie Chaplin brought against Life Magazine, for publishing his picture as "The Dictator," wasn't a well-laid publicity stunt of Charlie's. He's not only a great actor, but a very canny businessman, and he's too clever not to realize he got a million dollars worth of publicity out of it.

The New Yorker

By Leonard Lyons

New York, June 19.

WINSTON CHURCHILL: Esmond Romilly, your nephew who married Unity Mitford's sister, has moved from Florida and is now in Washington. He's received his first citizenship papers . . . DICK MERRILL: Sir Hubert Wilkins says that the Russians, who now own the plane in which you and John Lamb made a round-trip flight across the Atlantic, used it to make seven trips to the North Pole. Then they brought it to Moscow, to copy the equipment and design . . . JIM FARLEY: Massachusetts leaders of the convention delegates, who have been pledged to you, now insist that all bets are off and they'll favor a third term.

HAROLD ROSS: Your magazine recently stated that, although I helped christen PM, that newspaper would not employ a Broadway columnist. Sunday Ralph Ingersoll, the publisher, decided to start looking for one. Dorothy Parker has been offered the job. If she refuses it the field is open . . . HELEN HAYES: A sponsor, is preparing to present a new radio personality, who made an audition last week, at the suggestion of Peter Witt. The auditioner was your mother.

J. EDGAR HOOVER: Kilian and Vopel, the German 6-day bike champions, who now are touring this country, have been visiting the Nazi Consul in each city during their trip, for consultations . . . CORDELL HULL: David Cushman Coyle, one of the New Deal economists, is issuing a book this week, showing how we can take immediate steps to assure against economic invasions in South America. Professor Charles Beard is one of the endorsers of Coyle's plan.

CLIFTON FADIMAN: When Oscar Levant, who soon will become a father, was asked about the plans he's making for the baby's arrival, he said, "We're going to do our nursery in barbed wire" . . . LICENSE COMMISSIONER MOSS: Ted Peckham, whose escort service you banned from New York, will be the publisher of a new magazine, called "Escort" . . . GEORGE ROOSEVELT: Joanna Randlov, whose sister was your fiancee, has a new job at the "debunker" game at the fair. When a baseball is thrown and hits a bull's-eye near the ceiling she's thrown from a bed.

BERNARR MacFADDEN: Twenty-five years ago Dr. Alice M. Large examined Dan O'Brien, king of the hoboes, to determine the physical effects of rigorous hoboing upon an aging man. This week O'Brien again will be examined by Dr. Large. The hobo now is 87, and looks 30 years younger.

ERIC VON STROHEIM: When you asked for a rear table at Leon and Eddie's, because you "didn't want to be conspicuous"—you first should've rubbed off those red imprints all over your face . . . ROBERT HINCKLEY: Dick Merrill's plan for an aviation school, with Eastern Air Line pilots as instructors, hasn't materialized, because he couldn't raise $25,000 necessary to buy 10 small planes. It would have meant 500 trained pilots each year . . . FRANK CRAVEN: The producers of the 4-star movie, "Our Town," asked Sinclair Lewis for an endorsement, but he refuses. Lewis will play your role in that show in summer-stock this year.

CLARE BOOTHE: Otto Ludwig Preminger, who directed and portrayed the murdered consul in your "Margin for Error," arranged for Sam Levene—at the beginning of the second act—to draw a curtain which would shield the consul's body from the audience . . . so that Preminger thereby would be free to leave early at each performance. At the final show Saturday night Levene didn't pull that curtain. Preminger had to remain, immobile, in full view of the audience all night long.

LELAND STOWE: As soon as Ernest Hemingway completes his book he'll go to Europe as a correspondent. His pieces will retrace, step by step, the causes of each Allied failure . . . SENATOR STYLES BRIDGES: Your colleague, Senator Tobey, told the Senate last week that you were unavoidably absent "because of air disturbances." At that moment you were out making a radio address.

To San Francisco

Myrna Loy is planning a brief vacation trip to San Francisco and the World's Fair following completion of her starring role with William Powell in "I Love You Again"

Buggy Idea

Alan Hale has developed a combination flashlight and insect spray gun for night duty on back porch or bedroom. The light attracts the bugs, the spray gun wipes them out.

Louella O. Parsons

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

(While Louella O. Parsons is on her Honolulu vacation, this column is being written by her daughter, Harriett Parsons, producer of Screen Snapshots.)

Hollywood, June 19 (INS).—Get your front row seats, folks, for the big tug of war between Warners and M-G-M over "Calamity Jane." Not more than a week ago Warners announced that a story on Calamity's colorful career was in preparation as a forthcoming Bette Davis vehicle. This morning Metro announces plans to star Ann Sothern as Calamity. Writer Ronald Holders is at work lining up material on the pioneer tiger cat and the studio tells me the story will be ready for production shortly after Ann finishes "Dulcy."

LOUELLA O. PARSONS

The Warner script by Jerry Wald and Richard Maccaulay is already complete, but Bette couldn't possibly do it until she returns from a three-month vacation after "The Letter." Warners aren't a bit worried, however, claiming they registered the idea with the Hays office two months ago.

Errol Flynn's palpitating public will be glad to know that his bosses at Warner Brothers have at last made up their minds what their dashing glamour laddie is to do next. "Santa Fe Trail," Capt. Horatio Hornblower" and "The Constant Nymph" have all been announced for him at various times. Now Executive Producer Hal Wallis comes right out in meeting and says Flynn will start "Santa Fe Trail" in three weeks. Errol's due back from South America in two weeks, so he won't have much time for preparation before he heads for Santa Fe, N. Mex., on location. As his director he'll have Michael Curtiz, who megged both "Dodge City" and "Virginia City." Leading lady will probably be Olivia de Havilland.

William Seiter and Paramount have just gotten together on a deal whereby Bill will produce and direct the screen version of "Kiss the Boys Good-bye," Clare Booth's successful satire on the search for Scarlett O'Hara. Bill will take the Para chore when he completes the Rox Russell-Brian Aherne epic, "Hired Wife," for Universal. Understand he's hoping to borrow George Murphy from Metro, but Murph may be needed on the home lot to play the lead opposite Judy Garland in "Little Nelly Kelly." The genial Irishman has been making tests for the part and, if he gets it, will be seen both as Judy's young husband and as her father, with Judy appearing as both herself and her mother. Get it? Took me a while.

Snapshots of Hollywood Collected at Random: Talk is that Tom Lewis is out here to get his definite yes or no from Loretta Young; L. O. P. must have had a long distance call from Old Man Stork. She cables from midocean that he'll visit Jane Wyman and Ronald Reagan in February; while we're talking baby talk, might as well tell you the Bob Burnses expect their third in mid-September and the Kent Taylors are hoping theirs will be a Fourth of July arrival; the Jack Bennys sail for Honolulu today with daughter Joanie and the Myrt Blums, Mary's sis, and brother-in-law and Sam Woods takes off Friday with wife and daughter, Katherine Stevens; Brenda Marshall's suit for divorce from Richard Gaines, filed yesterday, will leave her free to wed Bill Holden in a year.

Mary Carlisle, at the Little Hungary with her steady beau, Jimmy Blakeley, telling friends she's definitely withdrawn from that P. A. tour with Jimmy Dunn; on hand at Laird Cregar's San Francisco opening in "Oscar Wilde" were Blanche Bates, Mayor Rossi, Ina Claire, Walter Huston and Elsa Maxwell. A big week for the Gene Raymonds: They celebrated their third wedding anniversary Sunday and Monday night did honors to Jeanette's birthday with one of their rare rounds of the night spots. Jeanette's anniversary gift to Gene was an oil painting of herself, his to her a gold ring which she'll wear over her platinum wedding band; Wendy Barrie goes to Coronado Friday to cram for her citizenship exams on July 8; Maureen O'Sullivan at the Beverly Hills Hotel with son Mike. They go to Canada soon to visit their soldier husband and father, John Farrow.

That's all today. Hope you're not as glad as I am!

Musical Purse

Ann Rutherford is assured of "music wherever she goes." The starlet's new purse, of black patent leather, plays a musical tune whenever she lifts the lid.

Little

In our intolerant times, the ageless legend of the Wandering Jew takes on an unhappy significance. That exceptional actor Conrad Veidt has the title role in the film version of E. Temple Thurston's play, "The Wandering Jew," which opened yesterday at the Little Theater.

One finds the historical sweep of the film of more concern than the religious issues it inherently raises. In these days it becomes not so much the saga of an unhappy people, but a record of discouraging distrust, incompetence and wretched superstition.

The roots of the legend are buried in an unanswering past and there are many versions of the unhappy Jew who spat in the face of the Savior on His way to Calvary and was condemned to walk the earth until He should come again. This approach to the story enlists four phases. The first concerns the original act of the Jew, the second finds him a fearless knight during the twelfth century crusades and the third a prosperous merchant in Sicily.

It is in the final episode of the Spanish Inquisition that the drama achieves its culminating impact. Here he is a Seville doctor, expiating his crime by doing good for the poor and finally arrived at a humane tolerance. When the inquisitors question him about his beliefs he points with terrible wrath to the difference in their actions from that prescribed by the Christ hundreds of years before. At last he is burned at the stake, but forgiven of his crime.

While not a new film, the production is a lavish one and the all-English company includes such honorable names as Peggy Ashcroft, Marie Ney, Dennis Holy, Jack Livesy, Abraham Sofser and Felix Aylmer.—R. L. C.

New 'Thin Man' for Powell-Loy Team

Once again Nick and Nora Charles, the fun-loving couple comprising a detective and his gay young wife, will carry their merriment across the screen, surrounded by thrills and murder mysteries, for William Powell and Myrna Loy are to be starred in "The Shadow of the Thin Man," another story concerning the Dashiell Hammett characters.

The combination of the stars and of Director W. S. Van Dyke and Producer Hunt Stromberg will be carried on in this picture.

While the script on "The Shadow of the Thin Man" is being readied, Powell and Miss Loy are running in "I Love You Again."

U. S. Warns Axis It Will Not Approve Transfer of French Lands in This Hemisphere would not acquiesce in any attempt to transfer any geographic region of the Western Hemisphere from one non-American power to another non-American power."

"America for Americans"

Governments of the other three belligerent powers, the State Department said, "have been informed in the same sense." That exts of the notes sent to Great Britain, France and Netherlands, which have possessions in the New World, however, were not made public.

While there was no official suggestion as to what the Pan-American conference might discuss, other than the United States proposal for a hemisphere economic union, observers believed many steps to keep "America for the Americans" would be brought forward.

These might include the establishment of a united front to block any Axis move to obtain possessions in the New World, means of combatting "fifth column" movements such as have occurred in several South American states, coordination of defense forces and joint use of air bases.

Other defense and foreign policy developments of the day included:

Chairman Walsh of the Senate Naval Affairs Committee declared he was "shocked" at testimony given the committee that the Navy had negotiated contracts with shipbuilding firms under which it would "guarantee" them 10 per cent profit.

Representatives of the Army, Navy, and defense commission testified at the same session, held behind closed doors, that they feared a 7 per cent profit on warship and plane construction might slow up the defense program. Such a limit was written into a pending bill by the committee Monday. Some of the Senators were said to have been sharply critical of the defense commission officials for asking a higher "profit incentive" to business in the emergency.

Army States Objections

Testifying for the War Department before the House Military Committee, Maj. Cyrus Q. Shelton declared the Army opposed the formation of a "home defense force." He contended the proposal outlined in a bill before the committee, would tend to "dissipate" the department's efforts to establish a regular force.

Chairman Vinson of the House Naval Affairs Committee, announced he "was authorized to state" that President Roosevelt approved of the $4,000,000,000 naval expansion bill.

Assistant Secretary of War Louis Johnson revealed that the enrollment of the Army Industrial College, which trains officers in mobilizing industry for defense, would be tripled next year.

In reporting the huge supplemental defense bill, the Senate committee added $71,436,000 to the total approved by the House. Major items of increase were: $43,500,000 for financing of production of aircraft motors by the Ford company; $1,500,000 for expanding naval powder production facilities at Indianhead, Md.; $7,500,000 for increase Naval Reserve training; $8,000,000 for additional Marine Corps ordnance, and $1,500,000 for establishing an air base at Canton Island, in the mid-Pacific.

The bill now provides $1,488,353,027 in cash and $289,136,761 in contractual authority. To make available immediately additional funds for installing additional antiaircraft protection on warships and for acquiring auxiliaries and patrol craft, the committee made $35,000,000 of the contractual authority allowed by the House a direct cash appropriation.

Ryland Methodist Brotherhood Installs Officers

The Men's Brotherhood of Ryland Methodist Church last night entertained their wives at dinner, and installed new officers.

They met in the church on Branch avenue, near Pennsylvania avenue southeast, where the Rev. Frank Y. Jaggers, pastor of the Anacostia Methodist Church entertained with a group of stories and character sketches.

The Rev. Karl Newell, Ryland pastor, lauded the progress of the brotherhood, and said it was contributing to the entire program of the church. Horatio Allison, William Gateley and Gilbert Coates furnished instrumental music. The following were inducted into office:

James Aiken, president; Charles Haga, vice president; Perry Miller, secretary, and James Wray, treasurer.

Heber H. Rice, president of the Federal Bar Association, in an address via WOL marking the 125th anniversary of the Battle of Waterloo, last night described the historic battle and outlined Napoleon's strategy.

Columbia School Graduates Hear Naval Officer

Loyalty and character in addition to training were stressed last night as requisites for advancement in technical fields by Lieut. Comdr. C. G. Halpine, of the Navy's Bureau of Aeronautics, in the commencement address to 252 graduates of the Columbia Technical Institute at the Wardman Park Hotel.

Diplomas were presented by Paul J. Leverone, principal, at the commencement banquet, which was followed by a dance.

An honorary diploma in electrical engineering went to Thomas V. Ward, deputy electrical inspector of the District government and an alumnus of the institute. Fred G. Stephenson was valedictorian at the exercises.

Sherwood High

Student at Sherwood High School, Sandy Spring, Md., presented their own graduation program. Speakers and their subjects were: Bertha Oland, class secretary, Youth and the World Today; Catherine Higgins, Youth Faces Its Problems; Andrew J. Thompson, 3d, class president, To the Graduates.

On The German Model

President Roosevelt's plan to subject all American youths to a year of Government training demands scrutiny by the public as well as by Congress. It is an innovation of very far-reaching implications. Fortunately, the President has given the public a preview of his rather vague plan so that it may be amply discussed before definite recommendations are submitted to Congress.

Unquestionably a year of training in public service would have positive advantages for young men and women. If properly conducted, the proposed training camps would prepare young men for useful service of a widely varying character. They would doubtless promote self-reliance, discipline and a sense of responsibility to the Nation. In addition, of course, they would give the country a large group of young people trained for the essential tasks of national defense.

While these advantages should be fully recognized, less favorable implications of the proposal should also be carefully examined. The President would not stop with compulsory military training. He would also draft young men for apprentice service as mechanics, as potential employes in industrial plants and as conservation workers, similar to the present CCC boys.

We should clearly realize that this proposal is closely akin to the compulsory labor camps of Nazi Germany. President Roosevelt drew an analogy with the CCC. But that organization operates on a voluntary basis. Compulsory conservation service would be an entirely different matter.

The important consideration in the President's mind is to put youngsters just emerging into manhood under some form of state-imposed discipline. Unquestionably modern youth would profit from a cultivation of fortitude and a heightened sense of responsibility. Emphasis on these qualities is the more essential because previous New Deal policies have encouraged young men to believe that they can make their way in the world on Government subsidies.

Yet we have not heretofore believed it to be the duty of a democratic state to discipline its citizens. Except in drafting men for military service, the Government has relied upon voluntary cooperation to carry out its projects. It may be that some modification of this view is now essential to our national security. But we should certainly inquire whether the same results could be obtained through voluntary training, so far as civilian activities are concerned.

Compulsory training and disciplining by the state is only one short step removed from compulsory labor. How far should the United States go in accepting totalitarian devices to enhance our national strength? That is a question of the gravest import. Before we substitute compulsion for cooperation in any field, outside the armed forces, the full implications of that policy should be analyzed with the utmost care.

How To Stop Worrying

Anyone who has called this war a headache was not, it appears, using a mere figure of speech. Many of the delegates to the convention of the American Medical Association, in New York last week, reported that worry since the conflict entered its acute phase has caused or aggravated ailments among their patients.

After the invasion of the Low Countries the doctors observed a considerable increase in headaches of unexplained origin, digestive disturbances, insomnia, loss of appetite and respiratory ills.

These complaints, the physicians said, are mainly among laboring people, some of whom are unaware of the cause. Psychiatrists told of an increase among patients from the professional classes. Persons able to rationalize on their troubles suffer from melancholia, depression, apprehension, listlessness, fatigue and a feeling of insecurity.

Such a state of affairs does not augur well for clear thinking. Thought, in a broad sense, is preparation for action. When action is thwarted or when no plan can be formulated, the thought may become worry. Except those who are called for special services, however, no individual for the moment can do anything direct or spectacular in behalf of national defense. Once this truth is recognized, the worriers should breathe—literally—more easily.

But recognition need not be resignation. Most of us are fortunate enough to have jobs. The more and better thought each one applies to his job, the less time he will have to worry fruitlessly about the war; the more secure will he be; and the stronger will be his country.

Limiting Commitments

There was good reason for the formal notification, served on the German and Italian governments, that "the United States would not recognize any transfer, and would not acquiesce in any attempt to transfer any geographic region of the Western Hemisphere from one non-American power to another non-American power."

This definition of position is not merely an affirmation of part of the Monroe Doctrine by the Administration. It is also indorsed by a resolution which passed the Senate unanimously, and was this week approved by the House with only eight negative votes. Notice is thereby served that the United States would to a certainty oppose, by force of arms if necessary, any annexation by the Axis powers of territory in this hemisphere now belonging to the Netherlands, French or British empires.

In view of the terms of peace now about to be imposed on France it was the course of wisdom for the Department of State to make our interpretation of the Monroe Doctrine plain in Berlin and Rome. But one could wish that this clear-cut statement had not been complicated and confused by the message which the President sent to former Premier Reynaud of France last Saturday.

In that statement, which had no Congressional backing, Mr. Roosevelt said that "the Government of the United States will not consider as valid any attempt to infringe by force the independence and territorial integrity of France."

So far as the French possessions in the New World are concerned, that assurance would seem to have made the later intervention by the Department of State superfluous. It is in the nature of anti-climax to speak for the preservation of parts after one has gone on record for the maintenance of the whole.

Mr. Roosevelt's message to M. Reynaud, however, could be interpreted as indicating that the Administration will refuse to recognize any territorial changes of any kind which may occur in Europe as a result of the war. That attitude is scarcely realistic and is unlikely to be maintained indefinitely. Therefore it was not superfluous to follow Mr. Roosevelt's personal statement with a more limited definition of policy, supported by Congress, which will doubtless be made effective if occasion warrants.

Representative Tinkham contributed to clarity of thought in the matter when he pointed out in the House debate that the original Monroe Doctrine "consisted of two parts, one as vital as the other." The first opposed European interference in the Western Hemisphere. The second specified that "in the wars of the European powers in matters relating to themselves we have never taken any part, nor does it comport with our policy to do so."

It would certainly seem logical to make sure of controlling the destiny of the New World before being too categorical about what we will or will not "consider as valid" with reference to Europe, Asia, Africa and the Antipodes.

Forgetting Congress

The most disturbing fact about the release of the Navy's new "mosquito fleet," so that these fast boats may be sold by the manufacturer to Great Britain, is the secrecy with which the transaction was negotiated. Even the chairmen of the Senate and House Naval Committees were astonished to learn of the transfer.

Chairman Walsh of the Senate Naval Affairs Committee is reported to have accused administrative officials of engaging in "apparently secret negotiations" with the result of diminishing our defensive strength. A legislator holding his position would not make such a remark at this critical juncture without being deeply perturbed by the policy the Administration is following.

Chairman Vinson of the House Naval Affairs Committee has written into the new naval expansion bill a provision to the effect that "no vessel, ship or boat now in the United States Navy or being built therefor shall be disposed of by sale, charter, or otherwise, or scrapped, without the consent of Congress." Considered along with Senator Walsh's statement, this move strongly suggests that release of the "mosquito fleet" has met with sharp disapproval on Capitol Hill.

Heretofore Congress has given emphatic indorsement to the Administration's policy of trading in airplanes and obsolete military equipment to help the Allies. It is not to be supposed that this desire to aid private American concerns in supplying the defense needs of the British has changed. But Congress is obviously bewildered as to where the line between our own defense requirements and those of the British government is to be drawn.

The inescapable conclusion is that there has not been a meeting of minds between the Administration and Congress on this matter. The President has not taken Congressional leaders into his confidence in working out the details of our foreign policy in this period of grave emergency. That fact may become a source of grave misunderstanding and confusion.

Indeed, continued failure to consult Congress on questions of such fundamental importance might easily lead to recriminations that would materially weaken the position of the United States in the present crisis.

Two-Ocean Fleet

Events are moving with such cyclonic rapidity that even the most ambitious defense plans are soon outmoded.

Some months ago the Administration proposed a 25 per cent increase in the size of the fleet. The bill, enacted into law early this week, actually authorizes only an 11 per cent expansion of the naval establishment. But even as the measure was going through the legislative mill its inadequacy was indicated by the changing circumstances of America's world position.

To meet the new situation a new bill, calling for an additional 11 per cent expansion of the fleet, was introduced in Congress Monday. By the time the House Naval Affairs Committee had listened to the expert testimony of Admiral Harold R. Stark, chief of naval operations, the second measure was also regarded as inadequate. The bill as submitted to the House by the committee would actually authorize a Navy some 70 per cent greater than the present fleet and would ultimately call for the expenditure of no less than $4,000,000,000.

Whether the giant fleet envisaged by the new measure, and greater than any armada the world has ever seen, will ever come into being events alone can determine. It would be 1946, at the very earliest, before all the ships authorized could be built, and by that time the whole world picture will have radically changed. If the changes are for the better the present naval construction program can be slowed down or scrapped. If changes are for the worse, even the present plans could be stepped up.

In the meantime, however, it might be fatal for the United States to rest on its oars. It is the counsel of wisdom for this Nation to assume the worst. For that reason a two-ocean Navy, which seemed wholly unnecessary as long as the British and French fleets dominated the Atlantic and the American fleet could safely be concentrated in the Pacific, becomes inevitable.

Squaring The Circle

Time was when, metaphorically speaking, the favorite animal of John L. Lewis was the elephant. That was in the days when the chieftain of the C. I. O. was a Republican stalwart who marched proudly under the banner of the G. O. P.

But life has a way of redoubling on itself. Since those distant days Mr. Lewis has gone far and furiously. In 1932 he became an ardent New Dealer, envisaging in the Roosevelt Administration the advent of a new heaven and a new earth for labor. But the dew has long been off that rose and John L. Lewis has since revealed himself as an uncompromising foe of a third term for Mr. Roosevelt.

Is Mr. Lewis now about to return to his old pastures? He says not. Labor, he told the Republican Resolutions Committee at Philadelphia yesterday, "has no cause to feel any confidence in the Republican Party in recent years because the Republican Party, as such, has practically abandoned labor." This would seem conclusive. Yet the day before he made that statement the C. I. O. leader took pains to exculpate Herbert Hoover of any charge that the former President had anything to do with the depression beginning in 1929.

Recovery, he told a conference of the National Association of Colored People, was actually under way when Mr. Hoover was voted out in 1932. On the other hand, he declared that the policies and weaknesses of the New Deal have kept the country in economic disorder for the last seven years.

So where are we? Mr. Lewis does not like Mr. Roosevelt. He does not like the New Deal. But he does not like the Republican Party either. At the moment we can assume only that his affection is limited to (1) John L. Lewis and (2) Herbert Hoover. But since Mr. Hoover is not likely to head a third party sponsored by Mr. Lewis, we are back just exactly where we began. And, despite the "beauty in the bellow of the blast" he unloosed against the G. O. P., that may be where the C. I. O. leader is going.

Time is a great healer, but it leaves a lot of scars.

Congress Should Stay

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: At a time when the fate of democracy is ominously declared to hang in the balance, the pressure now being exerted to hasten the adjournment of Congress is particularly disquieting. In our American democracy the grandiose pronouncements of individuals, whatever their rank or position, are not a safe substitute for that frank give-and-take through which our national policies should be defined and beaten out on the floors of Congress.

It would be exceedingly unfortunate if the American people should at this time be tricked into believing that the way "to make democracy work" is to adopt—temporarily, of course — totalitarian technique. Times of crisis put no burden upon the democratic process which it cannot bear, if the disposition to respect that process is present.

Many grave issues are now in need of sober consideration. For example, we are still unprepared for a defense program. The members of Congress are in a peculiar sense the guardians of the democratic process. In these crucial days they should remain in Washington, ready to perform their constitutional duties under any circumstances that may arise.

For Party Cooperation

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In the Middlewest many of us do not realize that a crisis may not be far off. The chief reason for this is that some of the most influential newspapers here are controlled by competing political parties, which seem to be out more for their own good than anything else.

This situation in the section of the country where our arms are to be manufactured does not aid our armament program in the least, as has already been shown in one or two minor disputes here.

Since I am a strong believer in democracy, I do not suggest Government control of these newspapers. However, I do wish to make a strong appeal to both Democratic and Republican leaders in the Nation's Capital to have their own party newspapers stop using the war for political purposes, because after all, neither party is in favor of going into war unless the vital interests of this country as a whole are concerned.

The only way I can see that we can keep our freedom of speech and freedom of the press, yet still be ready for any emergency, is to have our two great parties agree not to criticize each other hypocritically on war policy.

America And Japan

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: No sensible person can disagree with the argument of Mr. Walter Lippmann that peace between the United States and Japan is highly desirable. But in his contention that we should hasten to conclude an amicable arrangement because of the dangers which threaten us, Mr. Lippmann ignores consideration of facts which must be better known to him than to most Americans.

The most important of these, as has so often been emphasized by Japan, is that the only basis of friendship she will recognize is based on approval of her policy in east Asia, involving the conquest of China. Unless we are prepared to do that anything else we might do would be as futile as Mr. Chamberlain's appeasement policy at Munich. Any move we might make toward the conclusion of a new trade treaty would be interpreted by the war lords who rule Japan as an evidence of weakness and instead of making relations better would only make them worse. It would only encourage them to further aggressions and would be a disservice to the Japanese people whose progress is halted by their own war lords.

Mr. Lippmann appears momentarily to have forgotten that Hitler's attack on Europe, Japan's invasion of China and Mussolini's sword rattling were all preceded by the so-called "anticomintern pact" whereby the three became partners in a program which was not officially disclosed but has been made clear by actions. It is as a result of that pact and supplemental agreements that Mussolini is helping Hitler. The only reason Japan is not playing the same part is that she has bogged down in China and the American fleet is in the Pacific.

Give Japan a free hand and she would at once abandon her policy of noninvolvement—a policy that has been forced on her by her inability to carry out any other. With the open or secret aid of Japan to Hitler the chances of an Allied victory would be greatly lessened. Indeed, we might face much graver dangers than those which inspire Mr. Lippmann's fears—a victorious Germany on the Atlantic, a victorious Italy in the Mediterranean and a victorious Japan on the Pacific, all bound together by a secret agreement and each inspired by the same conviction that democratic governments should be crushed.

Faced by a menace of that seriousness, what further measures of appeasement could Mr. Lippmann suggest?

The Economics Of War

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Regarding your editorial, "Taxing or Taking," in The Post of June 12, it appears to me you express a basic and most dangerous fallacy. You say, "It used to be thought that wars were won and lost by finance ministers." Are we really to believe the provision and management of the sinews of war are of less importance in this complex industrial age than they were in the comparatively simple industrial age of the past?

Do you really mean to ask your readers to believe that the efficiency of the German war machine depends less upon the efficiency in the handling of the finances of the German government than the efficiency of England's defense in the Napoleonic wars was dependent upon the efficiency in the management of her national finances? What it appears to me you are really asking us to believe is that the provisioning of the armed forces of Germany is now of less importance than it has been for armies in the past.

Is not the entire process of providing the sinews of war and distributing them exclusively a financial problem? Government has no resources of its own. Regardless of the kind of government, it must draw its resources from the producing group, whether they be for internal defense, external defense, or any other purpose.

Now, regardless of the manner by which any government transfers the production of the people into its own hands, whether it be by taxation or borrowing, or whether it be by inflation—which is clandestine taking—or whether it be by more open taking as it appears is being practiced by the collectivist states, Russia, Germany and Italy, and regardless of the disposition a government may make of this produce, whether used for war purposes or other, the fundamental fact still remains that the taking over of this produce and disposing of it is a financial problem.

In any event, the taking of the produce is a levy, which is a financial problem. Whatever the government does with the produce is a financial problem. The etymology of the term "finance" indicates it has reference to a levy. The effectiveness of the levy and of its distribution, or spending, is wholly dependent upon the degree of efficiency of the persons who are charged with the responsibility of doing the levying and spending of it.

Let us not fall into the fatal belief, therefore, that wars are won and lost by finance ministers any less than heretofore, for precisely the contrary is the case. Of one thing we may be certain: The present successes of the German armies would not be possible except for what appears to me to be an uncanny efficiency of its finance ministers. German finance ministers are the vanguard of the German legions that are now overrunning Europe.

How possibly could it be otherwise if, as you say, "For Germany the sacrifice demanded of the people is almost past belief?"

Finance ministers are still the first line of national defense as they have always been, in our own country no less than elsewhere.

The reason I think your editorial is dangerous is that I believe it gives encouragement to the wreckers of our own national finances. This certainly is the inference I must draw from your statement, "It used to be thought that wars were won and lost by finance ministers." Surely the New Dealers who are now in control of our finances need no such encouragement, for they already have our first line of defense so completely weakened that it is, in my opinion, impossible for us to construct the quality and quantity of defense that our country now needs. These are hard words to be spoken in this crucial hour but words that I believe to be true and in dire need of being said.

FREDERICK C. SMITH,
Congressman, Eighth District, Ohio.

Experience For Officers

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It occurs to me that if an American Army should be obliged within the next few years to engage in a war, it will sustain, in the beginning, severe losses of men, as well as of material, on account of the lack of combat experience of the officers.

I, therefore, suggest that, as a part of the national defense program, arrangements be made for a very substantial number of American Army officers to be attached to Allied armies, in positions of responsibility, so that they might obtain actual, responsible combat experience.

I am not unmindful of the possibilities, first, that there would be substantial casualties among officers so placed, and second, that the possibility of direct involvement in the present war would be, to a degree, increased by such action. Nevertheless, upon consideration and balancing of all of the factors which I am able to observe at the moment, I cannot come to a conclusion other than that the course which I here advocate would be in the long run the soundest one to pursue.

Something Stern In Hats

She is a school teacher, so I suppose it is only natural that her hats should be somewhat on the sober side.

She has a way of becoming attached to her hats, having them retrimmed and blocked; so it was probably about five years ago that she bought her present bad weather knockabout.

The best way to describe that creation is to quote one of her friends who said that all she needed was "a turkey and a gun." The designer had undoubtedly seen a picture of the Pilgrim fathers. Her hat was the result.

Five years ago, it was not a knockabout, of course. It was a knockout, decidedly smart, flattering. Those who wore more skittish lids cast envious eyes at its fashionable lines which made no compromise with dignity.

I don't think anyone then attributed her selection to her puritanical ancestry or her pioneer forefathers. Even I, who had heard more than one story about the fortitude of her maternal forbears, drew no conclusions. Despite the fact that her grandmother blithely wished grandfather good hunting in California when the gold rush struck his imagination, ran the tanning factory for the next two years and pulled more profits out of it than he had ever managed before or did later. Despite the fact that her mother forgot she was a "lady" and ran a bangup dressmaking establishment for Sunday best, graduation, and wedding dresses—when it became necessary to supplement the Civil War pension allowed her father after he became totally incapacitated.

It wasn't sensible to attribute the choice of one hat to "iron in her blood," however qualified she was to inherit that "iron." How was anyone to know that this was only the beginning of a saga of serious hats?

Next on the program was a widish-brimmed and shallow-crowned edition of a riding derby. It took a while to classify that one, but we got it down properly when she had to change ribbons and veil after the first big rain. Stripped of its disguise, it was easy to identify as nothing more than one of those flat oval affairs seen now and again on the heads of solemn, black-gowned curates.

She asserted she took it with her when she sailed last summer, because more than one anguished woman had approached her when she went near hat departments in the stores to ask her where she bought it. If it was still in style to Washingtonians in its second season, it ought to do another few months, especially (she had read Margaret Halsey) in England.

She was probably being honest when she said this. But she certainly watched expressions on the faces of the hatted curates which university towns in the British Isles seem to have in abundance. Equipped with good English reserve, they trod past her up and down the streets and lanes; and so far as either she or I could see displayed no emotions about the matter although they would have had to be blind to miss seeing her in the close quarters of some of those lanes.

Apparently she took this hat as seriously as she had the Puritan number, because she had it "done" again the next winter and firmly planted it on her head when she set off for work. She still wears it.

But early this spring, she came home with another of those big round boxes which always mean an important new hat. This, she said, was a sailor variation; deeper crown than the curate model, a straight, round brim.

However, when I picked up a magazine and showed her a picture of a religious elder with snow white beard, she had to admit that his hat and hers weren't very different.

I thought all of this ought to mean something. A person should be able to draw a moral about a woman who owns and wears three black hats—one like a Puritan's, one like a curate's, and the third like a Mennonite elder's.

I called this to her attention, but she maintained there were no conclusions to be drawn. Said she didn't premeditate a collection of solemn millinery. Just coincidence. It probably is just coincidence. I've never studied psychology. But since she's my mother, I wouldn't mind its being proof she has some of those rugged qualities that produced Puritans, curates, Mennonites, and my mother's maternal forbears.

MARGARET DAVIS.

Against "Trade-In"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: "War, war everywhere and not a stop to think" would be the judgment of the Ancient Mariner if he saw what our Government is doing to the peace of this country today.

How can Senator Pepper take the attitude that this country can, at one and the same time, stay at peace and participate in the war by shipping Government-owned planes and guns to the warring governments of Britain and France? Nobody would believe that to "trade in" the implements of war to manufacturers on account for later deliveries was a bona fide, honest deal. The very protestations of desire to fight the British fight against Hitler, Britain's Frankenstein monster, shows us that the "trade in" is no less than shipping our supplies to the favored side, and no mere replacement contract.

One of the Senators pointed out that the whole idea of sending "aid short of war" will logically bring us into the war. I don't mean simply that Hitler will be able to attack the United States or one of its ships by way of retaliation for our partisanship. More than that, the sending of aid creates among our citizens the feeling that we have an interest, a stake, in seeing Britain win.

If the British continue to lose consistency will urge many Americans to favor the sending of our men (meaning me, who wants no part of it) into the battle to win for the British. This would be true even if we didn't lend them money but gave them the stuff outright, and the President, in following his course, is provoking that result.

Today And Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

The Immediate American Defense

ON THESE THINGS there is for all practical purposes unanimous agreement: first, that the United States will resist with force the entrance of the Axis powers into the territories of the Western Hemisphere. In the Senate there was no dissent on this far-reaching commitment; in the House virtually none. Second, that in order to make good this commitment, the United States will need, in case of a total victory by the Axis, a navy nearly twice the size of the existing navy. There is no opposition in Congress to authorizing such a navy. Third, that in case of a total victory by the Axis, ordinary commercial dealings between the European continent and the Americas will be impossible in that on the European side trade will be conducted by dictatorial governments exercising a monopoly of exports, and that against such a monopoly individual American traders will be helpless.

A few Congressmen may have failed to grasp this point but the American people, with their long experience of the danger of monopoly, will grasp it quickly enough.

There is, furthermore, agreement which though not unanimous is very substantial, that the need to defend this Hemisphere, the need to double the fleet, and the need to organize trade against the dictation of a European monopoly arise only because the Allied control of the seas between Europe and America is threatened with destruction. But for that no one would feel called upon to reaffirm the Monroe Doctrine. No one would feel called upon to construct another Navy. No one would be appropriating billions for armaments, imposing huge taxes, or getting ready for universal service. No one would be considering the abandonment of the principle of private dealings in foreign trade and the substitution of what, if the plan is to be effective, will be in essence the complete government regulation of foreign trade.

BECAUSE ALL these difficult and distasteful measures are forced upon us by the danger of a victory by the Axis, a very substantial part of the people are convinced that the support of the Allied resistance is a vital interest of the United States.

Seeing all these things, there is nevertheless division of opinion and confusion of counsel as to what measures the United States should now take. The Congress is ready to authorize another Navy. It is not willing to face the fact that this second Navy cannot be constructed in less than four years. Yet Hitler has conquered the continent of Europe in five weeks. The Congress is not willing to face the fact that if Hitler conquers Great Britain this summer, he may capture the British and the French navies. Combined with his own navy, with the Italian navy, and with the immense navy now under construction in British shipyards he will not only possess at once, at most within a few months, overwhelming naval superiority but he will be able to outbuild the United States in a race of armaments. The second American Navy, which now exists only on paper, would already be outmatched even if it existed. And before this second Navy can be built, the naval power of Hitler's Europe will have an even greater margin of superiority than it may possess before the summer is over.

UNWILLING TO FACE candidly this very real danger of the immediate future, Congress and a section of the public are for a policy of inaction now on the ground that the United States is too weak to defend its vital interests. The reasoning is curious. All are agreed that we must make ourselves strong enough to protect our vital interests in the future even though a totalitarian Europe allied with Japan has a crushing superiority in the World. But today when the Allied sea power still stands, when the United States still is the second greatest naval power in the world, we are told that this nation is too weak to move quickly and decisively to safeguard its vital interests. But if it is too late to move to support the British resistance and to make as sure as we can that, if the British are defeated in Europe, the fleet will not fall into Hitler's hands, then it will be much more too late to maintain our naval defenses if the British fleet, now turned against Hitler, is turned against us.

ADOLF HITLER
"Able to Outbuild the United States"

It is irresponsible and misleading to divert the attention of the American people from this, the most vital matter in their history, by political outcries about "going to war." The question is not whether we shall "go to war." The question is whether we shall act now so that this Hemisphere can in fact be defended. And whatever action is necessary should be considered not in the light of legal doctrines and political slogans but in the light of whether it promises to result in our maintaining a truly adequate naval defense in this Hemisphere.

IF WE TAKE MEASURES now to make as certain as we can that the Allied fleets do not fall to Hitler and that they are not turned against this Hemisphere we shall be acting in our own most immediate interest. What these measures are to be called, either in Berlin or Rome or by our own isolationists, is of no consequence. All that matters is that the second American Navy, which cannot be built for four years, shall not be outmatched before it is built by the captured ready made navies of Europe.

In the perspective of history it will seem almost incredible that the United States, possessing a great Navy, should have been paralyzed into inaction at a time when events were happening which, if they are allowed to run, will render that Navy impotent to defend the vital interests of this Hemisphere. Men will point to Russia, supposedly the ally of Germany, exposed as we are not exposed to the furious power of the German army, yet clear enough about its interests to occupy the border states and fortify itself against the victorious Nazis. And they will wonder what happened to the Americans, in what manner their minds were duped and their spirits doped, that they were unable to pull themselves together and take measures to safeguard the power of their Navy, the Navy which is their first and only reliable means of defense.

The Once Over

Convention Trouble

The political conventions to name candidates for the Presidency are at hand and for once both sides think the less said the better.

• • • •

With the world picture changing every few hours and no given situation good for over night even the best politicians realize they are not slippery enough to keep up with developments this year.

• • • •

Any stand on any issue may be made to look silly by the time the radio address has reached the last paragraph.

• • • •

These conventions are going to be particularly tough on keynoters. Even if they don't write their speeches until the night before they deliver 'em, some war development may throw a wet blanket over the microphone just as they start shouting.

• • • •

Views of convention orators will be subject to change without notice and it will be a lucky speaker whose argument will still hold water as he says: "I thank you."

• • • •

A man may laud a favorite son at 10:30 for principles which at 1:30 may make him a public enemy, a Fifth Columnist and a complete bust.

• • • •

The "than whomers" of 1940 are going to be on the spot, and no nominator should be foolish enough to go from one paragraph to the next without checking up on the latest war communiques.

• • • •

Platform makers are having the jitters already. How can they suggest a firm stand on anything in a world in which no set of facts is good for more than half an inning?

• • • •

On Tuesday night it may seem the popular thing to stand firmly for going to war on the Allied side and on Wednesday morning it may not even be possible to locate the Allies.

• • • •

Thursday it may seem wise to adopt a plank to keep America out of the conflict, but by Friday noon the delegates may find that there has already been a battle between American troops and an invader.

• • • •

It's just one of those years. The Republicans are in a particularly bad spot because they have to act first. This means getting three or four weeks less time to reverse themselves than the Democrats will have.

How long, dear Lord, can one mad nation

How long, dear Lord, will might make right,
And so continue in thy sight?

HERBERT HOOVER
Mark Sullivan doubts whether the memories of 1932 would really weigh against his candidacy

Why Not Hoover?

By Mark Sullivan

Republican Strategy

AT PHILADELPHIA, as the Republican convention gathers, they are saying Mr. Hoover would make the best President. But they say the Republicans had best refrain from nominating him—because, so they say, he would not be as good a candidate as some others.

Why would Mr. Hoover not be so good a candidate? They say that, with Mr. Hoover as a candidate, it would be just the 1932 campaign over again. Instead of present issues, the old 1932 issues would be revived. The old 1932 charges against Mr. Hoover's Presidency would be repeated. Mr. Roosevelt and his spellbinders would attack Mr. Hoover and his Administration with the same methods and the same arguments with which they attacked him in 1932. All that is given as a reason why the Republicans should not nominate Mr. Hoover, even though it is conceded Mr. Hoover would make the best President.

But would Mr. Roosevelt do those things? If he did, it might enlighten the country about 1932 and about 1940, about Mr. Hoover—and also about Mr. Roosevelt. But one doubts if Mr. Roosevelt would do it.

Would Mr. Roosevelt repeat, in a campaign against Mr. Hoover this year, that speech he made in his 1932 campaign against Mr. Hoover, at Sioux City, in which he said:

"I accuse the present Administration of being the greatest spending Administration in peacetimes in all our history . . . On my part I ask you very simply to assign to me the task of reducing the annual operating expenses of your national government."

AND WOULD MR. ROOSEVELT repeat, in a campaign against Mr. Hoover this year, that speech he made in his 1932 campaign against Mr. Hoover, at St. Louis, in which he said:

". . . The Hoover Administration has been responsible for deficit after deficit . . . It is my pledge and promise that this dangerous kind of financing shall be stopped and that rigid governmental economy shall be enforced by a stern and unremitting administration policy of living within our income."

Would Mr. Roosevelt repeat, in a campaign against Mr. Hoover this year, that speech he made against Mr. Hoover in 1932, at Albany, in which he said:

"Let us have the courage to stop borrowing to meet continuing deficits. Stop the deficits!"

Would Mr. Roosevelt repeat, in a campaign against Mr. Hoover this year, that passage in his early message to Congress, March 10, 1933:

"For three long years the Federal Government has been on the road toward bankruptcy . . . Too often in recent history liberal governments have been wrecked on rocks of loose fiscal policy. We must avoid this danger."

THERE ARE SCORES of such passages in Mr. Roosevelt's campaign speeches against Mr. Hoover in 1932. But let us dismiss, for the moment, the bearing of all this on whether Mr. Hoover should run again—and also its bearing on whether Mr. Roosevelt should run again.

Let us look in the face a somber present condition—a condition which literally and most seriously threatens our form of government. The threat is described in Mr. Roosevelt's words of 1933: "Too often in recent history liberal governments have been wrecked on rocks of loose fiscal policy."

When Mr. Roosevelt said that, in 1933, the national debt was some $22,000,000,000. Today, additions made to the debt by Mr. Roosevelt have more than doubled it; it is some 46 billions. What was in 1933, as Mr. Roosevelt put it, "three long years . . . on the road toward bankruptcy" is now 11 long years on the road toward bankruptcy.

And in this condition comes, at this very moment, necessity of making the debt still larger, enormously larger, necessity, arising out of need to defend ourselves against war. Against precisely this, Mr. Roosevelt was warned over and over by such men as Democratic Senator Harry Byrd, of Virginia—men whose warnings Mr. Roosevelt resented. Again and again Mr. Roosevelt was told, as year by year he increased the debt. "Yes, America can stand that much; it can stand a debt of 25 billions, 30 billions, 40 billions—but you should remember we might run into an emergency. We might face a war."

The danger Mr. Roosevelt first warned against, and then brought upon us, will be long with us. But turn back to the Republicans at Philadelphia.

IF THE REPUBLICANS think that Mr. Roosevelt is going to be the Democratic nominee; and if they expect to oppose Mr. Roosevelt on the basis of his record, including the appalling distance between his promise and performance—in that event, the best Republican candidate, from the point of view of bringing out the failings in Mr. Roosevelt's record, would be Mr. Hoover.

But omit all this about political strategy. If the Republicans have one man better equipped than any other, what reason can they give for not nominating him? The only reason anybody mentions is that Mr. Hoover, in the role of candidate, might be handicapped by the public memory of the attacks upon his Presidency during the 1932 campaign, and by the fact that Mr. Hoover's Presidency happened to coincide with the onset of the depression. But does that fallacy really weigh with any considerable number of persons any more? We have had seven years of education about that depression, and enlightenment has come to the very groups in whom prejudice against Mr. Hoover was most stirred. Labor Leader John L. Lewis said the other night: "It was a slogan of the 1932 Presidential election that Herbert Hoover was responsible for the depression. As a simple matter of justice, let me say here and now, that the workers of the United States realize that he had nothing whatever to do with it . . . It is only the self-seeking politicians who blame Mr. Hoover.

Books And Things

By Lewis Gannett

War Propaganda

"PROPAGANDA" is a propaganda word; it has an evil aura. You can guess the general outlook of Harold Lavine and James Wechsler by the title of their book: "War Propaganda and the United States" (Yale University Press, $2.75). They are against war. They are against the involvement of the United States in this war. To them, accordingly, those who are convinced that it may be, now or later, to the best interests of the United States to participate openly as well as semi-openly in the war are "propagandists." People of interventionist convictions have as good a right to pin a label on Messrs. Lavine and Wechsler: "Isolationist propagandists." These writers, who have been associated in the Institute for Propaganda Analysis, seem blithely unaware that they themselves are human, too.

Mr. E. C. Lindeman writes a foreword to the book and, with his usual wordiness, defines propaganda as "a method utilized for influencing the conduct of others on behalf of predetermined ends." As the word is commonly used, however, propaganda is a method used to influence people in behalf of ends of which we, who use the word, happen to disapprove. When we approve of the ends, we call our propaganda "education."

Not that Mr. Lavine and Mr. Wechsler are conscious propagandists, or deliberately unfair. They object, for instance, when rabid isolationists label Miss Dorothy Thompson as a "British agent"; they say that "the inference that she, like so many other American spokesmen of the Allied stand, was in the pay of the British had utterly no basis in fact." True enough. Yet 339 pages farther along they speak of Miss Thompson's writings as "Allied propaganda!" It is almost impossible for fallible human beings not to brand doctrine with which they happen to disagree as "propaganda."

So there is a certain muddlement throughout this book, as throughout most of the emanations of the Intitute of Propaganda Analysis, which started out so bravely to make issues clear for us. The authors try their best, but they cannot escape their own preconceptions. And one of their profoundest preconceptions is a conviction, which they occasionally deny in words and then make crystal clear by reiterated attitudes, that propaganda is making the major decisions of America today.

I don't believe it; I think Archibald MacLeish was right when he said that the post-war generation had been taught by exposures of propaganda to be unduly propaganda shy, to be actually afraid of words. Words count, but cunning words aren't everything. The major attitudes of the American people have been determined by a succession of events reported with amazingly little rhetoric by as cold-blooded, honest witnesses as have ever served mankind—the corps of American foreign correspondents.

These correspondents aren't perfect. We have had some too obviously deliberate sob stories in recent weeks; the facts reported without emotion seemed to me more effective. Where the correspondents have been denied access to direct news sources, they have done the best they could—and that is sometimes pretty bad.

I had the curious experience last summer of taking a German exchange student, temporarily employed in the German propaganda "Library of Information," to the World's Fair as my guest. He asked me what I thought of Jewish propaganda in the United States. I said it did not count. What did I think of the British propaganda? he asked. Very little, I replied; Duff Cooper was then stumping the land and hurting the British cause with every speech. I had been irritated by the young man's ardent Hitlerism, and I seized my chance.

"The only propaganda that has had any effect on America," I told him, "is German propaganda."

"What do you mean?" he asked.

"I mean the Day of Breaking Glass," I answered. "I mean what you did when you marched into Czecho-Slovakia. That's what moved America." So we walked on to see the Czech Pavilion at the fair.

IT ISN'T LORD LOTHIAN and the egregious Duff Cooper who have been changing the mind of America, perhaps too slowly; it is Hitler in Poland, Denmark, Norway, Holland, Belgium, France. He has changed our picture of the world and we have had to revise our patterns of word thought. We are still engaged in what must prove to be one of the most profound readjustments of thought habits in American history; and it is a major tragedy of our history, and possibly of the world's, that we are piddling through a political campaign at the same time.

British Backs To Wall

Duff Cooper's Address

New York, June 19.—Partial text of Alfred Duff Cooper's broadcast today as transcribed by the Associated Press follows:

In a great battle the French have been defeated. This is not the first time that a great nation has been defeated and has recovered from the defeat.

They have fought with heroism against superior numbers and superior weapons. Their losses have been terrible.

Now although they are still fighting the government has asked for an armistice.

They have demanded honorable terms. Whatever the terms of their armistice may be we can rest assured that the French people will not allow themselves to be reduced permanently to a state of slavery, and will maintain their love of their country and their love of liberty. In the fullness of time their country and their liberty will be restored to them.

To Great Britain the blow is serious because we have lost in the French army one of our most powerful assets. But we still retain the good will and the prayers of the French people as we retain those of the Belgians, the Dutch, the Norwegians, the Danes, the Poles, the Czechs and the Austrians.

The good will and the prayers of so many millions cannot in the long run prove unavailing. The problem for us henceforward is a grave one.

But it also is a more simple problem.

The front has been considerably reduced. It is mainly the coast of Great Britain. Bombardment and invasion of the island will be the next phase of the war.

And we shall feel confident that the people of the island will be able to defend it against all the might and malice of Germany.

We shall be fighting with our backs against the wall, but it is a very substantial wall we have behind us. It is called the Atlantic Ocean. And it stretches from the Old World to the New.

On the waters of that ocean British ships are travelling to and fro in large numbers day and night. Although a few enemy submarines may lurk here and there no enemy ship dare show herself on the surface.

On the other side of the great ocean the Dominion of Canada is throwing herself heart and soul into the task of producing implements of war and training men. South of that dominion now spreads across the continent the United States of America, the greatest source of supply in the whole world.

The Government and the people of that country are our friends. We have it from their own President that they are redoubling their efforts to provide us with all the means that we desire for the prosecution of the war.

South of the United States lies a series of American republics closely bound to the United States in policy well disposed toward Great Britain, productive and fruitful countries covering vast spaces of territory.

We have their full . . . and inexhaustible sources of supply. It has been generously placed at our disposal.

We have only to beat off the invader, hold him at bay for a few months and our supplies will begin to increase as rapidly as his diminish. We know that he has risked all in this great effort to obtain a swift victory. We know that he cannot face a long war. We can face it and we shall face it if we have to with confidence.

There is also another advantage in this new phase of the war—we are all together.

We are all in the same boat. Or rather in the same island. All of our expeditionary force has been brought home. And there still may be fierce fighting ahead, but at least we shall be side by side with one another. We shall not have to all face all that absence and separation entail.

Mothers and wives, sisters and sweethearts will have news of their beloved ones from day to day.

We are nearly all inside the fortress now. The fortress is well defended and well supplied. It will hold us until the efforts of the enemy are exhausted.

It is not the first time that we have been threatened by the invasion of a powerful foe.

Three hundred and fifty-two years ago the Spanish Armada put to sea against us. Remember what happened then. We were only a small island with a scanty population and there were no great dominions overseas standing shoulder to shoulder with us. As usual we were ill prepared. Our soldiers were few, our ammunition insufficient. The largest of our ships hardly as great as the smallest of our enemy.

Yet we faced that challenge and defeated it. We knew that the invasion was coming and a system had been arranged whereby huge bonfires would be lit in prominent places throughout the country to convey the warning that the armada has been sighted in order that the whole population might spring to arms.

May I read you a passage describing the night when that message was sent after the armada had been sighted. The passage in which he makes the geography of Britain suddenly become alive in twinkling points of flames.

"Night sank by the dusky beach and on the purple heath such night in England as ne'er had been nor 'er again shall be.

"That time slumber was as bright and busy as the day.

"High on St. Michaels mount it shone. It shone on Beachy Head.

(During this part of the broadcast Duff-Cooper turned to a historic description of the preparations against the Spanish armada, much of which could not be exactly determined from the broadcast as heard in New York.)

How familiar sound the names of all those places.

It is still the homes of some of us and which men and women who lived in them then were prepared to defend against another form of tyranny so long ago.

You may remember the words of Queen Elizabeth—another Queen Elizabeth—used when she reviewed the troops who had been collected from every quarter of the country to repel the invader.

I should explain that the armada which was due to land in Britain was commanded by the Prince of Parma.

The Queen said to the troops:

"I have the body but of a weak woman, but I have the heart of a King and of a King of England, too. And I hold it foul scorn that Parma or any foreign prince should dare set foot within my dominions."

Today one and all of us hold it foul scorn that any German parachutist or soldier or sailor should dare to set a foot within the land we love.

And our people will rise in their wrath and indignation and wipe out the vile invader as we have always wiped out invaders in the past.

'Mosquito' Boat Zooms Over Anacostia

Navy Puts 'Mosquito Boat' Through Paces For High Officials in Trial Run Down River

Acting Secretary of the Navy Louis Compton and high defense officials yesterday inspected a Walt Disney cartoon and four gleaming torpedo tubes, standard equipment for the streamlined speedboats which will form the Navy's new "Mosquito Fleet."

The Disney drawing, which shows a hungry mosquito riding a high speed torpedo, decorates the bridge of the PT-9, first of the motor torpedo boats to be delivered to the Navy under its $15,000,000 experimental small craft program.

Compton and Navy Department bureau chiefs boarded the PT-9 at the Navy Yard for a trial run down the river to Quantico, Va.

The vessel, capable of speeds of more than 50 miles an hour "with full military load," threw a muddy plume of spray as its bow sliced through the chocolate-colored waters of the Anacostia.

The PT-9 is one of 24 small high-speed craft under order for the Navy. The United States Government is waiving its rights to early delivery of 20 of these "sea whippets," freeing the manufacturer to sell them to Great Britain, it was revealed Tuesday.

Naval officers say the PT-9, which cost about $150,000, packs "half the hitting power of a destroyer." The craft mounts four antiaircraft machine guns in twin turrets and carries smoke-generating machinery. It is 65 feet long and carries one officer and a crew of eight.

The boat can fire its four torpedoes simultaneously, aiming them by its own course. The type has been used extensively by the Germans and British in the present war, according to the Navy Department, and can fulfill many of the missions of a destroyer.

"They are particularly useful at night when they can make swift, silent approaches upon larger vessels," an official Navy description says: "Aircraft carriers are especially vulnerable to their attacks."

The PT-9 is expected to leave the Navy Yard Thursday for Norfolk, Va., where the "Mosquito Fleet" will be based. The boat was built at the Elco Works of the Electric Boat Co., Bayonne, N. J.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Girl Is Unhappily Fascinated by Man Whom at First She Disliked Intensely; Now He Neglects Her

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I'm 17. Last summer I met a a young man whom I disliked intensely at first—as many people do. But as he continued to call himself to my attention, I learned to like him a great deal. In fact, we found ourselves seriously interested in each other, and we were often together, although mostly at group functions, where we always paired off. He seldom asked me out, but when he did, it was always to nice places.

He comes of an outstanding family, and has been reared according to their standards and beliefs. But because he was the first and favorite child, his father set such a high goal for him, and tried to drive him to it with such rigorous discipline and extreme fault finding that the son became resentful and rebellious and took himself off.

Now, his family considers him a "black sheep,"—as do many others, and tries to keep him under control. His mother, caught between two forces, is so greatly distressed that she even came to me to ask my help in bringing her son to his senses, so that he will go to work and make something of himself.

Although constantly warned against him by my friends, I have discovered, through intimate talks with him, that he is entirely different from what I had first thought, and from what others believe him to be. Last fall, however, we had a split-up, because I thought things were getting too serious. At that time I told him I never would see him again unless he changed. I didn't hear from him for over six months, during which period I couldn't enjoy myself with others, because of my constant thought of him.

Then one Sunday I happened to see him by chance, and it occured to me that I should tell him the real reason why I broke off. I thought it would help him regain self-confidence. Well, we were as congenial as though nothing had happened, and we had a marvelous time.

He took me home and we talked seriously about the past, and I told him the true reason why I had broken off. He said how much he had missed me, and several times stated that he was "not good enough" for me. I told him nobody was perfect, including myself, and he asked me to go steady, a proposal which I accepted, after (a) exacting a pledge from him to do better; and (b) giving him time to reconsider the whole arrangement based on that pledge.

All this was very fine and romantic. But I haven't heard from him for a week,—and this was a practice of his last summer, not calling for weeks. He used to tell me, though, that he wished he had the money to send me flowers and take me to the best places. But when I would reply that it was his companionship I valued most and not the good times that money can buy, he had nothing to say. He would wait to call me when he could take me out.

It has been awfully hard to put this down on paper, but I hope it is sufficient to guide you in helping me decide just how he feels about me; and just what I should do, in view of the way things are. I can't keep on waiting for him to call. I have to see him.

JENNIFER.

First Reactions Have Prophetic Import

DEAR JENNIFER: Your first intuitive reaction to this man gave you his measure; and told you (had you heeded it) to turn away in self defense. The warning signal flashed "Poison!" What is intuition? It is "knowledge obtained without recourse to inference or reasoning." It is "immediate perception."

Persons of sufficiently sensitive intelligence to embrace knowledge by the intuitive process are finely wrought, in their emotional make-up, and highly susceptible to influences for good or for ill. The very quality of their involuntary receptivity to suggestion makes it vitally important for them to obey without question or investigation, for their own protection, their so-called "hunches" against persons, particularly; but also against propositions and situations.

One exclusively known writer whose intuitive perception is so keen and encompassing that he is called a "mystic," has said that in the first split second of meeting a stranger, the intuitive individual is given to see, in synopsis form, the exact outlines of what his relationship with that newcomer are to be or could be. And it is unfortunate, he says, that this prophetic faculty is so little respected by the majority of those who possess it, and its message so largely ignored. This is a statement to the truth of which most intuitive persons must, in honesty, testify—yourself included.

This man is pulling you perilously off your course by the destructive power of his personality—a power of volcanic disintegration which first demoralizes his own performance and, nextly, that of such persons as make an emotional investment in him. There is more significant distress than you realize in your pathetic cry, "I must see him." This is unconscious admission that he is getting the upper hand in a relationship which, because of his nature, would always be a contest for supremacy. It is an admission that, far from possessing the requisite inflexible strength to shape him, you are in danger of yielding to his dominance. It tells that, far from having a mission to succor him, you have an urgent need to emancipate yourself from his spell.

You may tell yourself that it was a desire to restore his self-confidence which prompted you to give the real reason why you broke off last fall. But it isn't so. That pretty theory is a transparent rationalization of an irresistible impulse to make a desperately candid bid for his love, on almost any terms. You were hoping you might put through the deal on your terms; but failing in that, you are now in a mood to let him write the treaty. And considering his kind, such surrender would be humiliating and profitless to you, if not downright disastrous.

How does he feel about you? He cares enough for you that, if he were a different sort of person (the sort you want him to be), he would find you the wholly satisfactory feminine companion. But he has no immediate desire or intention of becoming that person. Being what he is, he finds more consolation in his anaesthetic excesses than in your solicitous society.

When he is with you, no doubt he is flattered and moved by your earnest appeal to his better nature; but out of sight and sound of you, I doubt if he thinks of you often or feelingly. If and when he thinks of you, it is probably with a cynical shrug, at his own expense, and a twinge of regret that he had to be such a heel, and you such a nice kid.

Once in a long while, when he feels like a dose of sunshine, he calls you—or formerly did, until you gave him the gate; for which he was grateful, on thinking it over, I imagine. Because it let him out of a role for which he knew he was so poorly qualified.

What should you do? The answer to that should be plain by now. Let him go his way and you go yours, without a backward glance or any tense clutching at vain hopes that you can, by hook or crook, translate him into an approximation of that falsely favorable image you have devised of him. Remember your first hunch. Abide by it. M. H.

Make-Up Technique

HOW ADEPT are you in the art of cosmetic make-up? Do you barely manage to get your rouge and lipstick on straight, or do you accentuate good points and minimize bad features? The Hollywood method of using subtly shades foundation for varying facial proportions is called "Cosmogenics." Many interesting results are achieved by using foundation creams in light and dark shades. This technique can be perfected by any woman.

This may sound complicated, but it's simple once you know the rules. The basic principles of light and shade are always the same. Here are the general rules for applying light and dark foundations:

Dark foundations tend to hide a feature and make it less conspicuous. Lighter shades high-light and emphasize a feature. Edges of the different foundation shades should be blended in smoothly with each other and drawn together with a generous application of powder. Do not use shades that are too different. A very slight difference in tones is enough to give the illusion desired without looking artificial.

To ovalize a round face and raise the cheek bones, use a slightly darker shade of foundation on the lower part of the face and a lighter shade on the upper bone structure. A light foundation over a receding chin will bring it forward, and conversely a dark shade will subdue an exaggeratedly pronounced jawlines. With a little experimentation, you can become expert at changing your own facial contour with foundation creams. There are many shades of foundation make-up in stick form that is easy to manipulate and also inexpensive.

Get Checkup When Reducing Starts Lagging

If Weight Becomes Stationary, Caloric Cut May Be Necessary

By Ida Jean Kain

WHEN THE scales jump down from 148 to 142 in a couple of weeks, and keep moving right on down to 138, reducing isn't half bad. But just about the time you start to brag, you suddenly stop losing. The scales seesaw up and down and you can't make any headway at all!

If you started slimming in the spring you should have lost from 10 to 12 pounds at this point. But, sooner or later, this initial weight loss is doomed to be followed by a stationary period, during which you may not lose again for two weeks. But cheer up! If you have lost 10 pounds, you can lose 20, 30, or 40—or as many more as you need to lose.

This interval is an excellent time for medical check-over. If everyone would follow her doctor's advice in reducing, there would be more successful reducers. Before you start your second reducing lap, get your doctor's advice as to how much more weight you can lose with safety.

How to Cut Calories

A temporary calorie cut may be necessary to start you off again. Deduct 200 calories from your present reducing menu. If you have been using the 1,200 calorie menu, drop down to 1,000 calories daily for the remainder of the week. Or, if you have been following the 1,000 calorie menu, go on "the fruit, bran, vegetable regime" for two days next week.

The fewer the calories, the more careful you must be that the protective foods are included in the menu. Otherwise, you will not have the vitality to reduce—and it takes plenty of vitality. Here are the foods to which the 1,000 calorie menu limits you:

ESSENTIAL FOODS	Calories
Lean meat, fish or fowl, liberal serving	200
Two cooked vegetables, one a green leafy	100
Two or more raw vegetables	25
Two fresh fruits, one a citrus	150
Three pats of butter, each ¼-inch thick	150
Bread, whole wheat, three slices	225
Skim milk or buttermilk, 1 glass	80
One egg	75

Should Get Vitamins

You cannot subtract any food from that list and keep fit—nor can you add to it and lose weight at this critical period in your slimming program. Anyone following such a restrained diet should take one Vitamin A capsule daily, even in the summer, to assure adequate amounts of this vitamin.

When you resume losing, you will probably not average more than one pound per week, but that is excellent progress. In fact, you should not be discouraged if your weight loss does not exceed a fourth pound per week, provided the loss is steady.

Beautiful Weddings Require Detailed Advance Planning

ALL EYES are on you on your wedding day!

To be a serene, lovely bride, learn well beforehand what's correct in etiquette and dress. Know what's expected of you in every scene of the wedding drama.

Your first big moment is the bridal procession. Poised and gracious, you take your father's right arm and walk up the aisle, 8 feet behind your maid of honor.

The bridegroom's at the right side at the head of the aisle and, as you approach, he steps forward. You withdraw your hand from your father's arm, shift your bouquet from your right arm to your left, and take the bridegroom's left arm. Together you face the clergyman.

At the reception, you star again. You cut the first slice of wedding cake, and share it with the bridegroom. When dancing begins, you have the first with him.

And the bridegroom? What kind of tie for him? The Ascot tie is smart with the formal cutaway. It may be pearl-gray or gray and black. With a business suit, a dark tie should be worn.

Who pays for decorations? How to seat relatives? Should you give presents to your bridesmaids?

Exercise of Tact, Caution Is Social Necessity In Gotham, With All Jumpy From War Hysteria

New York, June 19.

THE FACT that our hamlet is the world's greatest polyglot city is one of its chief sources of interest and charm, in peace time. But when war rages in the Old World, it renders the places almost unfit for human habitation, putting old friendships in the chill basis, and making caution and tact almost constitutional. Always a firm believer in the fact that Gotham is not really a part of the United States, I think that perhaps we should now be barbed-wired and held incommunicado.

Everybody, in the last six weeks, has been as jumpy and suspicious as a pup in a new home. And not entirely without cause, allowing for the hysteria of the time.

Our troubles were doubled when the man with the jutting jaw decided to take a hand. We have more than 400,000 Italians, and since that race has a peculiar flair for successfully handling the eating and drinking public, even going to your particular cafe, presents a problem now. Political and bellicose conversation has been forbidden waiters and martini mixers practically everywhere in town, but what is a poor bartender going to do when a citizen who has hoisted a few insists on discussing and denouncing? The poor fellows have to be first-class diplomats, and even find excuses to skip around nimbly if the idiot wants to make something of it. It's a hard lot for all of us, and all we can do is our best.

Aimee Larkin, women's editor of Collier's and just back from the commencement ceremonies at Princeton, tells me that she never saw the beat of the girls present for very simple and tasteful dressing. A fair cross-section of girls of good family and taste, and maidens to be proud of, says Aimee, and Aimee knows.

Strong Colors Give Room Lusty Charm

Provide Background For Duncan Phyfe Furniture Arrangement

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin

AMID ALL the subtleties of the present season's restraint in colors, there was a vigorous lusty charm about a room that used clear strong colors and bold contrasts. It was a background for Duncan Phyfe furniture combined pleasantly with some incidental old pieces of Victorian design.

The walls were painted white with the ceiling in turquoise blue and the floor carpeted in turkey red broadloom. The big upholstered furniture was slip covered in a cabbage rose cretonne on a white ground—the same material was used for draperies, elaborately looped back from gilt cornices and hung over lace curtains.

Side chairs had seats covered in a gold and blue striped material, while a small love seat was covered in pale gold velvet. Accessories in brass and in crystal lent shining accents.

Dining Alcove

A dining alcove adjoining had both walls and ceilings in turquoise, with the same red carpet. Here white furniture with a porcelain smooth lacquered finish was complemented with chairs with seats and backs in the flowered cretonne.

Here Sheffield silver and crystal were the accents, while the windows were curtained with lace and flowered cretonne as in the living room. For privacy when needed, a pair of screens were placed on either side of the opening leading to the alcove. These screens were made of plyboard which on the dining room side was painted turquoise blue.

Ancestors on Walls

On the living room side alternate panels were painted white with the balance of the panels covered in the white ground cretonne.

Ancestors and relations dominated the walls. In the living room, three old portraits in wide gold frames looked down on the scene. In the dining room, the wall above the buffet was covered thickly with framed photographs and tintypes, all framed alike in flat white frames an inch wide.

How One Woman Lost 26 Lbs. of FAT
Fat Girls—Here's a Tip

NEW YORK—Special. In 40 days Mrs. Helen Blaugh reduced 26 lbs. Took 4 inches off hips, 3 inches off bust and 7½ inches off waist. Writes: "I feel fine and look 10 yrs. younger."

How would you like to safely and harmlessly lose 15 pounds of fat in a few weeks? How would you like to lose your double chin and your too prominent hips and abdomen and along with it get the increase in energy and improvement in health which so often accompanies excess fat reduction?

Get on the scales today and see how much you weigh. Take a half teaspoon of Kruschen in a glass of water first thing every morning. Then eat non fill of foods that lessen caloric intake. After 30 days weigh yourself again and just see if you haven't lost pounds of ugly fat. Kruschen is a famous English formula made in U. S. A. It comes in either the new pleasant bubbling form or plain non-fizzy form for those who prefer to take it in hot water. A bottle lasts 4 weeks and costs but a trifle. Money back if you are not joyfully satisfied. Adv.

Baked Beans With a Difference for Picnic Basket

WASHINGTONIANS seem to be ardent picnic fans. With all the lovely nearby spots for outdoor eating there is little wonder that a picnic is the thing very often. Surprise packages for the picnic basket lend enchantment to outdoor eating. At a picnic in Rock Creek Park a few days ago I feasted on a hot casserole dish that was the mainstay of the picnic supper. The hostess called them "picnic beans." She had carried the hot casserole containing the beans wrapped in a heavy layer of newspapers in the bottom of her picnic basket. And the beans had stayed piping hot for two hours after she took them from the oven.

Here is the recipe she used for making the casserole of beans.

Picnic Beans

Empty one 1-pound, 14-ounce can baked beans—the kind with molasses and pork—into an oven casserole. Add 2 tablespoons dark brown sugar, a dash of salt, ¼ teaspoon dry mustard, one 14-ounce can pineapple gems which have been thoroughly drained and 2 tablespoons the pineapple syrup. Mix well, cover and bake in a moderately hot oven, 375 degrees, for 25 to 30 minutes or until beans are very hot. Beans may be topped with bacon slices before placing in the oven, if desired. Yield: 4 generous servings.

Anderson House Scene Of Tea to Aid France

Stream of Notables Pours Into Residence That Is Now Headquarters for Society Of the Cincinnati to Assist Cause

FRIENDS OF FRANCE turned out in droves yesterday afternoon for the benefit tea and musicale at Anderson House, the national headquarters of the Society of the Cincinnati, and once the home of Mrs. Larz Anderson. Down from Boston especially for the event, Mrs. Anderson greeted dozens of her old acquaintances who were on hand for the event arranged to raise funds for antiaircraft defense canteens in France.

From 4 to 7 p. m., a steady stream of notables poured through the magnificent doorways at 2118 Massachusetts avenue. Featured entertainment of the afternoon was the singing of several numbers by Richard Crooks, Metropolitan Opera tenor, who contributed his services to the cause, and thrilled every guest within the sound of his magnificent voice.

Following his program, Sidney's orchestra played more than two hours while the company moved out to the garden where tea, coffee, punch, and a variety of tea-time dainties were served. Small tables were set up on the lawn, and guests clustered in small groups around each to enjoy the pleasant party.

Very much a center of attraction was Mrs. Anderson, who was trimly turned out in a black and white figured chiffon frock, set off with a small white hat, trimmed in black velvet ribbon. Formerly devoting much time to writing, Mrs. Anderson said she had for the time being, given up all other interests in order to work for French relief. She will return to her home in Boston today.

French Envoy Popular Guest

The French Ambassador, Count de Saint Quentin, was in a small group seated at a garden table with Mrs. Anderson. Others who stopped by for a brief chat with them included Miss Mary Patten, Mr. and Mrs. Laurence V. Benet, Mrs. Claude Pepper, Myron Hofer, and virtually every member of the French Embassy staff.

Mrs. John R. Williams held a court of her own in the English drawing room, where she was hostess and where she and Mrs. Frank Leets gathered a crowd around them for well over two hours. Several other rooms, full of art treasures, also were presided over by hostesses, among them being Mrs. Wallach Merriam, Mrs. Nathan Wyeth, Miss Marian Trumbull.

For more than an hour guests thronged around the two buffets set up on the terrace. A notable list of women assisted at the tea tables. Mme. Emmanuel Lombard, Mme. Charles Lucet and Countess de Limur were on duty during the entire party. Others who took their turns at assisting were Mrs. Truxtun Beale, Mrs. Warren R. Austin, Mrs. Franklin Ellis, Mrs. Corcoran Thom, Mrs. Clarence Hopkinswall, Mrs. William J. Flather, Mrs. Patrick Hurley, Mrs. James L. Houghteling, Mrs. Cazenove Lee, Mrs. William Chambreau, Miss Mary E. Patten, Mrs. Frank B. Noyes, Mrs. John Jay O'Connor, Miss Janet Fish.

Official Wives Also Assist

Those assisting from the official contingent included Mrs. Robert H. Jackson, Mrs. Arthur H. Vandenberg, Mrs. Jesse Jones, Mrs. Warren Lee Pierson and several others.

Attractive Miss Peggy Essary, hostess at Anderson House, was very much on the job during the party, and was here, there and everywhere seeing that guests were served and had an opportunity to go on a tour of the house in case the visit was their first. A group of debutantes conducted personal tours through the mansion and sold souvenir cigarette cases, vanity boxes and ornamental pins bearing the French tricolor.

An unusual decorative accent was noted in the flower centerpieces on the buffets. Carrying out the French colors, they featured white and red carnations, interspersed with similar flowers dyed blue.

Percy Blair, curator of Anderson House, solicitously moved from group to group, seeing that all guests were served. Among those seen in the crowd were Mrs. Albert Niblack, Mrs. Carl Droop, Mrs. Sidney Cloman, Mrs. Ernest Draper, Mrs. Breckinridge Bayne, Miss Anne Randolph, George T. Summerlin, Blanton Winship, Mrs. J. Frederick Essary, Mrs. Ollie James, Mrs. McCook Knox and dozens of others.

The ceremony took place at 8:30 in the First Methodist Church. The Rev. Edward Cook officiated. The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a gown of white lace over satin, with a panel of marquisette appliqued with lace down the front, and a full train of the marquisette. Her fingertip veil fell from a tiara of orange blossoms and she carried a bouquet of white orchids and lilies of the valley.

Ellen Floweree Leaves for Home

In a shower of flowers sent by her many friends here, Miss Ellen Hewes Flowerree has departed for her home in New Orleans. She has been invited to visit Arthur Bradley Campbell and his two cousins, the Misses Meuser, in Newport this summer, but as her father is ill and her brother in California, she may decide to remain with her mother.

Miss Flowerree's uncle, Clarence Hewes, with whom she has made her home this year, will leave next week to attend the Republican National Convention. Mr. Hewes usually spends his summers in London, but with Europe out of the question these days he has decided to stay in Washington this summer. He may visit Newport and Hot Springs, Va., but so far has not made definite plans.

The Hon. Julian Chetwynd, who has been staying with Mr. Hewes since his arrival several weeks ago to work at the British Embassy, will be joined shortly by Mrs. Chetwynd and their child. They will take an apartment at the Wardman Park.

Mother and Dad Take the Background When Birthday Cakes Top the Program

Underwood & Underwood

Secretary of War and Mrs. Harry H. Woodring look on while their two children, Melissa (left) and Marcus, decide who shall cut which birthday cake first. It was a gala occasion yesterday, the celebration of two birthdays. Marcus was 6, though Melissa won't be 5 until tomorrow. A Noah's ark and circus party, it was given at the Shoreham Hotel, where the Secretary and Mrs. Woodring make their home

Noah's Ark Features Birthday Party for Woodring Children

Melissa and Marcus Entertain Friends; Youngsters Pull Ribbons From Boat And Are Surprised With Teddy Bears

Noah's Ark and the animal kingdom were featured at the birthday party which Mrs. Harry H. Woodring, wife of the Secretary of War, gave yesterday at her apartment in the Shoreham in honor of the combined birthdays of Marcus Woodring, 6, and Melissa, 5. Although Melissa's birthday is not rightfully until Friday, the two birthdays always are celebrated at the same time.

Twelve children attended the party, which included ringside seats at a circus, which was put on at 4:30 in the Shoreham supper club. Real dogs, ponies and a monkey who perform every night on the Shoreham terrace, went through their tricks for the little guests.

After the circus the children were given their supper around a huge table decorated with a massive Noah's Ark and all the animals. At each place was a ribbon leading into the ark and when the children pulled the strings a teddy bear for each was drawn from the ark.

Two birthday cakes on the table also were decorated with animals. Melissa's cake bore a little dove with an olive branch in it's mouth, while Marcus' cake was decorated with rows of animal crackers marching side by side around the icing. Even the ice cream was in the shape of animals.

Children who attended the party besides Marcus and Melissa Woodring, were their little brother, Cooper Coolidge Woodring, Paul Lutes, jr., Emily Trible, Gilian Naude, son of the attache of the South African Legation, and Mrs. William Naude; David and Goodloe Byron, sons of Representative and Mrs. William D. Byron; Shaffer Martinson, a nephew of Secretary and Mrs. Woodring; Charlotte McNary, daughter of Senator and Mrs. Charles L. McNary; Nancy Holmes, Beatrix, Judy, and Betsy Blair, daughters of Dr. and Mrs. Montgomery Blair, jr.

Melissa's birthday will be celebrated again on Friday with a family picnic in Rock Creek Park.

Birth Dates Instead Of Place Cards Tell Guests Where to Sit

Birth dates—with the correct year omitted, and 1910 inserted in each instance—instead of place cards told guests where to sit yesterday at the luncheon given by Mrs. John O. Herrick in honor of Helen Essary (Mrs. J. Fred Essary) newly elected president of the Women's National Press Club and one of Washington's most popular newspaper women.

Mrs. Herrick (Genevieve Forbes) has long been known as the only person around these parts who never forgets a friend's birthday. And yesterday, her knowledge came in handy, as the seven guests assembled in honor of Mrs. Essary found their places at the table.

The party took place in the Herrick home in Arlington, Va. Incidentally, Mrs. Herrick is a former president of the Women's National Press Club.

Mme. Ertegun, wife of the Turkish Ambassador, was ranking guest. Others there included Mrs. Arthur H. Vandenberg, who will be off to Philadelphia soon to attend the Republican National Convention; Mrs. Bulkley Griffin, Mrs. Irene Caldwell and Miss Ruth Eleanor Jones.

About the Town

with DUDLEY HARMON

HYSTERIA IN the suburbs:

The other evening a German Embassy couple who live on Washington's outskirts gave a large party. Their neighbors poked their heads out the window in an effort to identify the cars of the Americans present, and thus discover who attended.

WHAT DO WASHINGTON diplomats do whose countries have been cut off from the rest of the world? That question has been agitating Washington lately.

The Netherlands Minister, Dr. Alexander Loudon, can't communicate with anyone in Holland, but he has never worked harder in his life. Every morning he is in town finds him at the chancery at 7:30 with a cup of black coffee at his elbow. People to see him and long distance calls, to request information or express sympathy, pour in all day.

The envoy makes frequent trips to Eastern cities to give speeches, and earlier in the week spoke with a Dutch group at the World's Fair. Last night he addressed a group of Washington doctors at a dinner here. He is in constant touch with leading Dutch businessmen in New York.

Not one member of the legation staff has heard a word from their relatives in Holland since that country was invaded.

FANTASTIC RUMORS are floating around Washington—but nothing seems incredible after the recent events in Europe. Latest report is that King Leopold wants to enter a monastery. But will there be any monasteries left?

A MEMBER of the Washington Friends of France calls up to say that the Friends have every intention of continuing to get their supplies into France for relief of the civilian population. They canceled their proposed benefit to have been held July 14, French Independence Day, for obvious reasons, but plan to stage a different kind of a benefit on some other day, not yet selected.

SOME OF US fairly young people are getting rather tired of lugubrious older ones who say to us pityingly, "How sad it is to be young today. The world is falling to pieces and you are going to have to pay all the bills."

Granted the world's an awful mess. Granted, too, that life may not be easy for us Americans under 30. But when our uncles and aunts shudder as they point out that our standard of living may be heading for a nosedive, I just don't get it. Did our pioneer ancestors crumple up and moan because they couldn't go out and buy a lot of gadgets?

Dr. William Allan Neilson once warned a batch of Smith College juniors about to sail for France for a year's study: "Remember, you mustn't judge a civilization by its plumbing." Maybe from now on my American bedroom isn't going to have an adjoining bath—so what?

For years, it hasn't been smart to be earnest. Anyone who was serious for a second was in danger of being called a Girl Scout or a Pollyanna. But you can't laugh off the prospect of mounting taxes for armaments in this country, or the menace of eventually being involved in war. On the other hand, will we get anywhere by sitting down for a good cry?

Mrs. Sinclair Sets Wedding

Many prominent Washingtonians and residents of nearby areas will leave today for Columbia, S. C., to attend the wedding of Mrs. Judson-Hyatt Sinclair to Dr. William Bell Wardrop, both of Washington, on Saturday at Sleepy Hollow, estate of Mr. and Mrs. George Hyatt, brother and sister-in-law of the bride.

Tomorrow, Mr. and Mrs. Hyatt will entertain the entire day at Sleepy Hollow for friends and out of town wedding guests. Swimming and outdoor games will feature the afternoon program which will be followed by a barbecue chicken dinner.

A group of colored people will sing spirituals and plantation folk songs during dinner. Later there will be dancing in the log cabin lodge on the estate with music furnished by a string orchestra.

Among those heading south are Mrs. S. T. Ansell, wife of Gen. Ansell, U. S. A.; Mrs. John Lewis Smith, Mrs. Carl Walker, Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Arbaugh, William Sherer, Mr. and Mrs. Elliott Bowles, Judson Bowles, Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Stevens, Mr. and Mrs. William C. Linton, Judge and Mrs. J. M. Proctor, Mrs. E. Whyland Shaffer, Mrs. Harry Swagert, Lieut. and Mrs. Massie Hughes, Mrs. E. E. Eynon, Mrs. R. C. Leary, L. E. Sinclair, Mr. and Mrs William Love, of Washington; Mr and Mrs. Warner Pumphrey, Dr. and Mrs. William J. Kettler, Dr. and Mrs. R. Paxson, Mr. and Mrs. William Walsh, Dr. and Mrs. W. B. Mehring, Mr. and Mrs. E. Francis McDevitt, Mrs. W. E. Matter and Mrs. Rose Hargrave, of Silver Spring, Md.

Dr. Wardrop has reserved a floor at the Wade Hampton Hotel for the guests.

Table talk turned chiefly on plans for the flower show and "Virginia ham supper" to be given at Gracelands, the Rixey Smiths' country place on Saturday, June 29. This event, which promises to be a successful one, is being sponsored by the Garden Club of Fairfax and the Difficult Run Garden Club, of McLean, Va., for the benefit of the Red Cross.

National B.P.W.C. Head Of Education Visits Here

American Youth, Long on the Receiving End, Must Start Now on the Giving End, According to Miss Margaret Hickey

By Jessie Ash Arndt.
The Post Club Editor.

American youth has been too long on the receiving end of the line; it must start now on the giving end, in the opinio of Miss Margaret Hickey, education chairman of the National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs.

She likewise believes "the hitching post days, when a woman tied up tight to her job, are over. Women must be prepared to move along on the broad and open highway, paved with rapid economic and job changes."

Miss Hickey is here from St. Louis for a few days as guest of Mrs. H. Lyle Campbell, president of the District Branch of the League of American Pen Women, and also has conferred with Mrs. Earlene White, honorary president of the national federation, and an active member of the local cluub.

Miss Hickey is directing the vocational and educational program of the organizatino—a program designed to "help boys and girls to see that any work that needs to be done is socially important and praiseworthy."

Material Success Not Always Objective

"In our program of improved guidance, training and placement, we try to show young people that their objective should be to find the work at which they can serve best, not necessarily that which offers the greatest material 'success.' They should learn to look around to see what most needs to be done in a community, not to find the thing they want to do the most," said Miss Hickey.

"The time has come in America, when it is essential that effective use be made of all the talents of all the citizens," she asserted. "Improved training and guidance is needed not only in school but out."

The program of the national federation is designed to help American youth to get both vocational skills and sound American philosophy of service and work, she said. Scholarships for business training are offered by most of the 1,600 business and professional women's clubs in the federation and the national organization has carried on extensive research as to trends and opportunities.

Sound Programs Provide Opportunities

Discussing the outlook for the American business woman, Miss Hickey declared, "We all need to sharpen our skills and build up a job reserve of improved methods, attitudes and viewpoints, to take the place of depreciated and outmoded ones. The after-hour periods should be used in getting out the mental pick and shovel to dig out new facts and new ideas."

Sound club programs give women opportunities to study organization technique, Miss Hickey believes. As a consultant on personnel problems for some years, she found that women needed to familiarize themselves with organization practices. It helps them to become objective; aids them in conciliating widely divergent ideas into a workable whole; to be sympathetic and tolerant. There is a definite relation between club leadership and job advancement, she says.

Miss Hickey is principal of a private school for secretaries in St. Louis, which has many alumnae in Washington. It is Miss Hickey's Training School for Secretaries, which she founded 12 years ago with an enrollment of 25 girls and which now has a limited enrollment of 250. Mrs. Campbell, during her residence in St. Louis, was consultant on the speech and diction program.

Mrs. Campbell, new president of the Washington League, will receive, assisted by the past presidents: Mrs. Theodore Hance Tiller, Mrs. Agnes Giles Newman, Mrs. Estelle Maloy Moses, Dr. Jean Stevenson, Mrs. Azalea Green Badgley, Mrs. Inez Sheldon Tyler and Mrs. James T. Watson.

A poem, "Tipsy of the Moon," written by Ida Elaine James, which was set to music by Elmo Russ, and sung recently in the French Pavilion at the New York World's Fair, will be the principal music feature of the afternoon.

Blue and gold, the league colors, will predominate in the decorations. These will be arranged by Mathilde Kolb Bartlett, who recently won three first prizes in the Woodridge Garden Club contest, for the best arrangement of spring flowers.

At the tea tables, the reception chairman, Mrs. Tomas Cajigas, will be assisted by Winifred Willard, J. Jeune Carter, Annabel Glenn Lawyer, Nelli Walker Irish, Dr. Mary Meek Atkeson Moore, Agnes Winn, Elizabeth Tilton, Mrs. Richard Disney, Angela McHugh Barr and Mrs. Philip Clancey.

Conventions that will really be opened with prayer

"ALMIGHTY GOD, we humbly beseech thee to give this nation strength... to give our leaders wisdom and courage..."

How many times such words have reverberated through the Party Convention halls of America—over bowed heads secretly busy with large ambitions and little intrigues—hearing the old words only as a hungry boy hears his father's grace before meals.

Next week in Philadelphia—next month in Chicago—will there be one heart so calculating or so shallow that it does not lift up into the throat with that prayer?

▶ We must go back to the summer of 1864 to find political conventions like these... the summer when Grant and Lee fought it out, and the gray and the blue lay in windrows at Spottsylvania and the Wilderness.

1916 was not like this. There was war in Europe—but oceans were still oceans and no American felt that danger was on our doorstep.

What were we so excited about back in '96? "You shall not crucify mankind upon a cross of gold!" We were arguing about what metal our money should be made of.

What were the Bull Moose doing in 1912? "We stand at Armageddon and we battle for the Lord!" They were saving us from William Howard Taft and the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill.

Strange things we Americans have quarreled over... in the light of this hour, when mankind is being crucified upon the hook-armed cross, and Armageddon flares into world-wide fury.

▶ Outwardly, perhaps, the Conventions of 1940 may seem the same as those of less portentous years. Again we shall hear the thrilling Roll Call of the States—the beautiful and sonorous names, Spanish and English, Indian and French, whose alphabetical march takes the listener's mind on tremendous, exhilarating leaps across the map. Again there will be blaring bands, flamboyant oratory, hour-long demonstrations.

But underneath the surface bedlam, there will be sober recognition that more than political issues are at stake; that picking the Right Man means picking the Right Man for the country, not just for the Party. The man who is signed on as captain faces little likelihood of a calm passage over glassy seas; the barometer has already dropped and may go still lower.

▶ Even the dullest delegate will approach his job this year with a feeling of grave responsibility. And that feeling will be shared by the men and women massed in the 700 seats occupied by the representatives of America's newspapers.

There in the midst of the oratory and the cheering, with bands booming and flash bulbs flaring... in the thick of events, complicated, turbulent, and historic... these men and women will perform the job that the U. S. demands of its journalists.

Every one of them will do his part to show us the real scene beneath the carnival. Every one of them will know that he is reporting the first steps in the democratic process of disagree, compromise, and unite... knows that the two-party system makes possible majority rule, and that majority rule is the essence of democracy.

▶ The newsmen—on the floor, in the committee rooms, watching candidates' hideaways, or spreading their ears to the breeze of rumor in the lobbies—are there, not to represent a party, but to represent us, the American public.

"Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty." Without the press in these still-free United States, we could not exercise that vigilance however much we tried. We cannot be alert to the dangers or benefits of a situation unless we understand it—and the men and events that brought it about.

▶ Making men and events clearer and more vivid is the special job of the Weekly Newsmagazine. For many months, TIME readers have had the background of these dramas soon to be enacted in Philadelphia and Chicago. Names that are just names to many voters are real people to TIME readers. Events that seem surprising to casual headline-samplers are often predictable.

The TIME reader knows how his country runs itself, and knows that he knows it. As a citizen, he can pull his weight in the boat. Now, as never before, the boat needs it.

This is one of a series of advertisements in which the Editors of TIME hope to give all the readers of this newspaper a clearer picture of the world of news-gathering, news-writing, and news-reading—and the part TIME plays in helping you to grasp, measure, and use the history of your lifetime as you live the story of your life.

Alexandria Wars on Tax Delinquents

1,400 Warrants Issued to Beat Limitation Law; $50,000 Owed

Moving to avert the loss of approximately $50,000 in delinquent taxes, as a result of a new statute which becomes effective on Saturday, the City of Alexandria has issued warrants against approximately 1,400 delinquent taxpayers, City Attorney Armistead L. Boothe said yesterday.

The new law, passed by the State Legislature in March, deprives all Virginia municipalities of the right to collect personal property taxes after they become five years in arrears, the city attorney explained. It does not affect cases in which the city or county officials have entered suit against the delinquents, however, and Alexandria officials are attempting to reduce all tax bills to judgment before they are voided by the measure.

Boothe said the major portion of the task had been completed, and city officials expect to have all cases docketed before the law goes into effect. Warrants are being issued at the rate of almost 200 a day, he asserted.

The first warrants have been made returnable in court on July 8, and prosecution of cases against the delinquent taxpayers is scheduled to start on that date. Hearings will be held in civil and police court by Judge James R. Duncan.

All costs connected with the legal procedure involved will be assessed against taxpayers, according to City Manager Carl Budwesky. Many persons, he said, are cognizant of this fact, and have paid taxes as soon as warrants were served to escape assessment of additional court costs.

'Immigration' Club Topic

Edward J. Shaughnessy, deputy commissioner of immigration and naturalization, of Washington, will be the guest speaker at the weekly luncheon of the Alexandria Kiwanis Club today at 12:15 at the George Mason Hotel. He will discuss immigration problems in relation to the current world crisis.

The program has been arranged by Joseph Schwarzmann, who will introduce the speaker. John W. Ayers will preside.

757 Get Jobs

The Alexandria office of the Virginia State Employment Service aided employers in filling 757 jobs during May, according to District Manager Carter W. Friend. Private employers, including contractors, business concerns, factories, merchants and householders accounted for 710 placements.

The May placements brought the total number of jobs filed by the office in 1940 to 2,782, Friend said. This is approximately 12 per cent of the total placements made by 34 offices throughout the State, he stated.

During the month, the report showed, the office received 340 new applications; 556 applications were renewed and retentions numbered 510. A total of 1,406 applications were on file at the end of the month.

In addition to local placements, the office referred five applicants to employment in other sections of the State, it was announced.

The Alexandria office, maintained by the State as a free service to employers and employees, serves Alexandria, and Arlington, Fairfax and Prince William counties.

26 Deeds Recorded

The corporation court in Alexandria placed a total of 26 deeds on record during the week ended yesterday, Clerk Elliott Hoffman reported. Value of property involved in the transactions was set at $127,690.

The largest individual transfer was for property valued at $17,000, the smallest for $100.

Wilson High Stand Collapses Under 400; Two Injured

Collapse of a low stand yesterday marred graduation exercises at Woodrow Wilson High School with injuries to two students and torn clothing for many members of the senior class.

Jacob L. "Jake" Crane, football star who played in every game last season without injury and who scored his team's only touchdown, was the principal casualty. Crane 3811 Jenifer street northwest, was severely cut on the foot.

Frances Norton Rucker, 3902 Legation street northwest, suffered a bruised foot.

Frightened parents attending graduation exercises at the school, Nebraska avenue and Chesapeake street northwest, screamed as more than 400 graduates piled into a heap. The stand, a little more than 3 feet high and built to enable a photographer to take the class picture, sank into the ground beneath the students' weight and toppled.

Early Muster of Va. Guardsmen For Special Training Indicated

By the Associated Press

Richmond, Va., June 19.—The State defense council today urged Virginia employers to begin at once to consider steps to replace temporarily employes who are members of the National Guard.

The action was recommended in anticipation of a possible early muster of the Guard for special training.

At the same time it was announced that Lieut. Col. Mills F. Neal, of the State staff, a military member of the council, has been assigned as executive officer of the council. Col. Neal has volunteered his services to handle correspondence and other business of the group which was organized by Gov. Price as a measure of State defense and national preparedness.

The council will open an office next week in the State office building in Capital square.

Dr. Douglas S. Freeman, chairman of the defense council, cited the necessity for finding temporary substitutes in business and industry for Guardsmen in a statement as follows:

"Employers are urged to begin consideration of the steps they should take to find temporary substitutes for National Guardsmen who soon may be mustered for special training. Before the orders come, employers should be prepared to put in substitutes so that there will be no delay or disarrangement of service in any factory, shipyard or transportation sytem.

"In choosing temporary substitutes for Guardsmen, employers should remember that selective service in the fullest sense of the term probably is the next step in the development of national defense. This means that it will be unwise and wasteful to retain as a substitute for a National Guardsman a worker who probably would be classified as A-1, subject to the first call, when compulsory military service is voted.

"The wiser choice of temporary substitutes for National Guardsmen will be men of middle life who are married, have dependent children and are not apt to be called to field duty.

"Emphasis is laid on the temporary character of the arrangements made with those who substitute for Guardsmen called to duty. It is hoped that the period of training will not be long. Whether it is for a month or, unhappily for a year, Virginia will expect every employer to return to his position at the end of his period of training every man who has answered the summons to service. Any displacement of National Guardsmen because of their absence on military service would be so unpatriotic that no Virginia employers will stoop to it."

Way is Cleared To Sell Fireworks In Prince Georges

Sale of fireworks by Prince Georges County fire departments will continue this year unhampered as a result of a ruling by Judge Eugene O'Dunne in Baltimore, Tuesday.

Judge O'Dunne granted a permanent injunction against enforcement of regulations recently set by State Insurance Commissioner John Gontrum. Under the terms of the injunction, only regulations consisting of "written orders directed to the owners or occupants of premises or building" can be enforced.

Gontrum had exceeded his powers in making the ruling, according to the judge. The injunction was granted at the request of two wholesale dealers in fireworks.

Hillandale Church Aide Is Mourned

Adventist Services For Edmund Vincent Who Drowned In Rhode River

Members of the Hillandale (Md.) Seventh Day Adventist Congregation rejoiced last Saturday at exercises marking completion of their new church, built with their own volunteer labor.

Yesterday the grief-stricken congregation again assembled at the new church to hold funeral services for Edmund Vincent, 39, a carpenter, who had been one of the most faithful workers.

"His experience and efficiency was of inestimable value in the construction of the new Hillandale church," Elder Archa Dent told the sorrowing congregation. "Brother Vincent donated 39 days of labor."

Vincent was drowned Sunday in Rhode River, near Mayo, Md., while celebrating with a party of Adventists the completion of their church. He lost his footing while riding a surfboard.

The new Hillandale Church was begun last Labor Day with only $300. Money for material was raised through donations. The congregation was determined not to go into debt. As the donations came in, additional work was done.

The building is made of brick and seats 200. At present, there are only 68 in the congregation, but it is expected the group will increase now that they have a church.

It wasn't hard to get skilled workers because virtually all the men in the congregation are tradesmen. The local elder, M. R. Peden, helped with the plastering and managed the finances. The total cost of the church was less than $3,000.

Mrs. Wade Hampton, Washington educator and lecturer, expressed the belief that Germany will not invade England.

Bethesda Woman to Get $50,000 Trust Income

Cumberland, Md., June 19.—By her will admitted to probate yesterday, Mrs. Lalitie Nash McKaig, vice president of the Cumberland Steel Co. and wife of Wallace McKaig bequeaths most of her property to her husband.

A trust fund of $50,000 is established and the income is to be paid semiannually to her mother, Mrs. Isabelle Tracy Nash, Bethesda, Md.

An unusual clause sets up a $1,000 trust fund, in the event her husband remarries and becomes a father. The money would be invested and kept in trust until the child reaches 21 years of age. If this child died before maturity, the trust would revert to a second child, and so on.

Loughborough, county purchasing agent, and John C. Blaine, supervisor from Lee District, to survey conditions at the jail and to estimate cost of improvements suggested in a report issued by Dr. Carpenter.

Dr. Carpenter stressed the urgent need of improvements in the jail kitchen. He recommended installation of modern wash sinks and proper covering for the floor. Lighting is also bad, he said.

He pointed out the sheriff is in need of a suitable place for storing food for the prisoners.

In the jail proper, he said, there is need for better conditions in both the white and colored sections. He stressed the need for repair to the concrete floors and conditions around the showers in both sections.

The committee will make its report, with recommendations, at the July meetmg.

Red Cross Asks 2d Donations After 'Disappointing' Day

Receipts Amount to Only $5,769 Here; Need Growing 'More Dire' Every Hour, Chairman Bruce Baird Says in Appeal

Chairman Bruce Baird, of the District campaign, appealed for second contributions to the Red Cross war relief funds yesterday, a day which brought "disappointing" receipts amounting to only $5,769.

"Many friends of the Red Cross," he said, "knowing how desperate the situation really is, have given second contributions to this cause. Others, I am sure, would give a second time if approached.

"It is time to ask for second gifts. It is time to strain every effort to help Washington reach her goal.

"We are told by the national headquarters of the American Red Cross that the need is growing more dire every day, and that every penny of Washington's quota of $300,000 is needed."

Yesterday's contributions brought the District's total to $267,340, leaving $32,660 to be raised in three days if the quota is to be reached by the deadline.

Gifts reported yesterday included those of Mrs. C. F. M. Fadely, $250 (second contribution); Mrs. William H. Patterson, $100; Washington real estate firms, collected by George O. Vass, $315.50; District school teachers, $861.15; District school children for the National Children's Fund, $1,148.59; Motion Picture Owners, $100; Fenner and Beane, $250, and District of Columbia Typographical Union, $25.

In the Government unit, the District Public Health Service reported $53; Office of Government Reports, $8.45; District Jail, $25; Department of Agriculture, $534; District Plumbing Division, $24; Federal Housing Administration, $58; Securities and Exchange Commission, $32.25; Federal Works Agency, $351.57; Interior Department, $661.92, and War Department, $197.20.

National Red Cross headquarters reported the war relief fund had passed the $13,000,000 mark in the $20,000,000 drive.

The first error was made by South, who should have doubled the one no-trump call by East immediately instead of making the feeble bid of two no trumps. How the bidding would proceed from that point would, of course, depend largely upon the opponents and whether or not North and South believed that the set would be more than their slam.

Over four clubs, we think North should bid again. It should be obvious that South is trying to show that he has a big hand and is a little confused how best to do it. Over four clubs, North could bid either four spades or four no trump and leave the slam decision up to South, who with his powerful hand certainly should proceed to six in spades or no trump.

U. S. 'Can Cut Rings Around' World in Science Once Resources Are Marshaled, Dr. Bush Says

Chairman of Defense Research Body Optimistic on Aims

By Gerald G. Gross
Post Staff Writer

"The United States can cut rings around any country on earth in science and technology, once its resources are coordinated and set in motion."

Spoken not boastfully, but as an objective statement of fact, those were the words yesterday of Dr. Vannevar Bush, President Roosevelt's appointee as chairman of the National Defense Research Committee.

Holding his first press conference since his selection last week to head the all-important scientific "brain pool," Dr. Bush replies thus to a suggestion that Germany's technological prowess might be unmatchable.

Offers Received

Seated in his office at the Carnegie Institution, of which he is president, the former dean of engineering at Massachusetts Institute of Technology outlined the future activities of the research committee. But only in a general sense, for he explained the work will be largely of a confidential nature.

Already, he declared, the committee has received offers of asistance and cooperation from hundreds of individuals and groups. Careful consideration will be given to all ideas and suggestions, notably those of inventors, relating to national defense, Dr. Bush said.

One of the most perplexing problems confronting the committee, working in close association with the National Academy of Sciences and National Research Council, is the matter of publication of American scientists' achievements, the chairman asserted.

Offers Received From Hundreds To Help, He Asserts

Solution Sought

To continue the present policy of unrestricted publication in professional journals of scientific developments — including preparedness progress—would make such information available to possible enemies of the future. On the other hand, said Dr. Bush, to withhold this material would work a great disadvantage to other scientists who depend upon the literature to keep abreast of advances in their respective fields.

Both the academy and the research council are striving for a solution of the puzzle, Dr. Bush said.

The committee, whose job is "to accelerate the creation of improvement of instrumentalities for national defense," will not concern itself directly with aeronautics or medical research, according to its chairman. These are the responsibilities of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics and the medical division of the National Research Council, respectively, he explained.

Dr. Bush, incidentally, is chairman of the NACA.

Recalling the deluge of wartime inventions upon Washington in 1917-18, when 2,000 miscellaneous devices and schemes were received weekly, the committee has made plans for a possible repetition. One of its members, Conway P. Coe, patent commissioner, will have charge of such submissions.

Eminent Scientists in Group

In answer to a question, Dr. Bush said no special effort has been made yet to enlist the cooperation of the hundreds of refugee scientists in the United States. He explained, however, that the defense research committee is not yet fully organized and its first official meeting is yet to be held.

The Secretaries of War and Navy have not appointed their representatives on the group, which is a branch of the National Defense Advisory Commission. Eminent scientists who have accepted places to date include James B. Conant, president of Harvard University; Dr. Karl T. Compton, president of Massachusetts Institute of Technology; Frank B. Jewett, president of the National Academy of Sciences; Dr. Richard C. Tolman, of California Institute of Technology, and Dr. Lyman J. Briggs, director, National Buread of Standards.

"The response from educational institutions and from industry and scientists and engineers all over the country has already been extremely gratifying and fully indicative of their desire to be of all possible service," Dr. Bush asserted.

Zoning Fight Flares About Radio Antenna

Forty-First Street Residents Protest Proposed Structure

An appeal to the Board of Zoning Adjustment yesterday for permission to erect a 200-foot radio antenna on Forty-First street just south of Brandywine street northwest drew vigorous protests from numerous residents of that section.

The request was made by Lawrence J. Heller, attorney, who recently received authorization of the Federal Communications Commission to operate a local, independent broadcasting station.

The Forty-First street tower, he said, would be a "booster" station for his principal transmitter. Civic leaders in the community, however, contended the tower would prove an "eyesore, hazard, and source of interference for receptions of programs from other stations."

Heller also asked to erect a 210-foot tower for his main transmitter either at Eighth and I streets northwest or on Thirteenth street just south of O street northwest.

There were no protests against the Thirteenth street site and only one against the Eighth street location—on the grounds of "unsightliness."

Should he be permitted to construct his tower at the proposed Thirteenth street location, said Heller, it would be atop a new, six-story apartment house.

Because the Brandywine tower would be close to the Woodrow Wilson High School, a representative of the school was fearful it would interfere with reception of other educational programs listened to by students.

A transcript of yesterday's testimony will be submitted to the District Zoning Commission for final action. The hearing was conducted by the zoning adjustment group at the request of the Zoning Commissioners.

In another case, the board deferred action on application of the Order of the Holy Ghost and of the Immaculate Heart of Mary to establish headquarters at 1615 Manchester road northwest.

Other applications approved were:

65 Playgrounds And 2 Pools Open Today

44 More Areas To Begin Activities By End of Week

Sixty-five school and community center playgrounds will begin full-time schedules today. As part of the city's determined drive to keep youngsters off the streets and prevent child casualties, the grounds will open at 9 a. m. and remain open until dark.

Lewis R. Barrett, coordinator of recreation, said the grounds would be adequately supervised by regular staffs and 110 WPA workers. Swimming pools at the Georgetown and Rosedale play centers also will open today.

By the end of the week, Barrett said, 44 additional grounds will be thrown open for the summer.

Each of the grounds, Barrett said, will conduct carefully planned recreational programs. Every effort will be made, he said, to make the play spots and their facilities attractive to children.

Again parents were urged to support the city-wide child-safety movement by warning their children against playing in the streets.

A large number of the grounds, Barrett said, are equipped with wading pools for the younger children and these also will open today.

Full-time schedules will begin today at the following grounds:

Palisades, Chevy Chase, Hearst, Reno, Gallinger, Georgetown, Montrose Park, Paul, Phillips, Mitchell Park, Jefferson, Edgewood, Langdon Park, Taft, Turkey Thicket, Eastern, High School, Takoma, Hamilton, Park View, Raymond, Roosevelt-MacFarland, Twin Oaks, Central, Powell, Happy Hollow, Hoover, Thomson, Henry Polk, McKinley, McMillan, New York Avenue, Kenilworth, Rosedale, Sherwood, Stuart, Anacostia, Buchanan, Montgomery, Stevens, Morgan, Langston, Logan, Bean, Lovejoy, Randall, Bowen, Barry Farms, Garfield Park, Hine, Virginia Avenue, Banneker, Howard, Garnett-Patterson, Monroe, Dunbar, Shaw, Fenton, Walker, Francis, Rose Park, Lincoln, Burrville, Deanwood, Birney and Garfield.

★★★★ WASHINGTON: THURSDAY, JUNE 20, 1940 19

Near Riot Averted as Dodgers Beat Cards, 8-3

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

Cleveland, June 19.—Baseball is such a charming game and small wonder it has such a grip on the public imagination. In Cleveland, a player revolt all but crowds the war off the front pages. In Brooklyn, Ducky Medwick is beaned before the Dodgers get him paid for and Larry McPhail shakes his fist at the whole Cardinal team. With the Giants, Dizzy Dean's washed-up kid brother, Daffy, beats the Cubs twice within a week. Reports from the Yankees' camp state that Oscar Vitt is a lovable, honey-tongued fellow compared to Joe McCarthy, who is cracking the whip over his slumping champs.

POVICH

Cleveland has won five out of six games since the rebellion broke out against Vitt, and the Cleveland newspapers are now plumping for bigger and better rebellions. Not since the Indians started fighting among themselves have they shown such aggressiveness on the ball field. Washington's "best team since 1933" is in eighth place and tightening its grip on that position. The Red Sox, who were seemingly ready to throw up the sponge, find themselves rather safely in the league lead. The league trading deadline fell without a single trade being made, just as if it was an eight-way tie for the lead. Bob Feller is only the third best pitcher on the Cleveland club, accordng to the records.

The Nats went the words of the popular song one better the other night in Cleveland and had the wind and the rain and the Cleveland Indians in their hair. Joe DiMaggio can't buy a base hit of any dimensions and Rip Radcliff, who was traded to the Browns by the White Sox with a good riddance tag, is now leading the league. The Cardinals have been on a winning spree ever since they sold Joe Medwick and the Dodgers can't win since they bought him for $175,000. Sammy Hale, who broke Oscar Grimes' cheek bone with a line drive in batting practice and put him in the hospital for a month, hooked him in the scalp on a fishing trip the other day and sent him back to the hospital.

But Cleveland is the laugh spot of the league. Despite Manager Vitt, despite their insurrection, the Indians are now playing the best ball in the league. But if you think all is just ducky on the Cleveland bench, you ought to visit it some time. Since their rapprochement, Vitt and his ball players are simply too, too nice to each other. The place reeks with hypocrisy, and if they are patting each other on the back, which they are, the suspicion is that they are seeking a soft place for what they have in their other hand.

The Cleveland situation can't go on. At least not unless Vitt wins the pennant with his prima-donnas, which is plentifully remote seeing as how they don't hit very well. Vitt has the backing of Owner Alva Bradley to this point, but woe to Mr. Vitt if he succeeds only in piloting his third place club into third place.

Vitt now has a kind word for everybody on the Indians, but it smacks of a mere show. He knows he was the victim of the scurviest trick ever played on a manager by a gang of ball players and if they do, perchance, win the pennant for him, there may be a settling of scores. A pennant winning manager can ride high and take steps against some ball players who tried to get his job when he had two strikes on him. If it isn't one thing it's another (copyright).

The other day, Ben Chapman all but mounted into the press box to quarrel with the official scorer who refused to give him credit for a hit on a batted ball and charged it as an error for Second Baseman Benny McCoy of the A's. It was the prize outburst of Chapman, who has been a cry baby for base hits since he came into the league and has been shouting that official scorers have been robbing him of his bread and butter batting average.

In the big Cleveland Municipal Stadium they flash the hits and errors on the scoreboard in lights and when Chapman learned he had not been credited with a hit on the day in question, he raised a fuss. He stomped around first base and was all but picked off the bag by the A's pitcher. He gazed toward the press box and ranted at the official scorer, and at the end of the inning he tiraded at the press box from the dugout.

In Washington, Chapman threatened bodily harm against a Washington baseball writer who scored an error as an error. He's just a sweet tempered little lambie-pie who wouldn't harm a flea, unless it had two wings and could fly.

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

New York, June 19.—Stop me if I'm cockeyed, but if Arturo Godoy loses a tough decision tonight at the Yankee Stadium, President Roosevelt's almost desperate effort to make South America fall in love with us is going to get a kick in the teeth.

CONSIDINE

With Sr. Vargas cheering for the dictators, Brazil full of German "students," the Nazi short wave stations flooding South American radio sets and fifth columns stewing in Uruguay, Chile, Argentina and who knows where else down there, it is going to be difficult enough to convince the countries of the downstairs continent to walk along with us down the dark alley of a totalitarian world.

There was terrific indignation and the old cry of "Yankee imperalism" in Chile and elsewhere down there last February when Louis was given the decision over Godoy.. For 15 rounds the millions of listeners down there were led to believe—by means of the radio—that Arturo was giving Louis a terrific kicking around. All we saw at the Garden war an apelike clowning fighter staying 15 rounds (by every means except fighting) with a sluggish champion who either couldn't fight him or was saving him for an outdoor engagement.

Louis never looked worse and never was as timid.. Godoy slapped at him clumsily, mauled him and pinned him against the ropes. If he could have hit worth a peseta he could have won, against that kind of a Louis, but the only damage he was doing was to the fight game. Louis was unmarked at the end of the 15, while Godoy—blazing hero of the South American broadcasters—had the chewed-up face of a pepping Tom who looked into a kitchen ventilator fan.

The only justified cry of "robbery" which might have been yelled that night at the Garden would have come from the ringside seat buyers. But they didn't squawk, nor did Godoy nor Al Weill. Weill contented himself with saying: "They might have given us a draw." And if you know Al you know that such a statement is tantamount to saying, "Geez, what a licking we took."

But while the customers were filing out, remembering only that they had borne witness to an unusual but not unexpected defense of the title, the angry knots of citizens already were gathering throughout South America. Soon the South American newspapers began to appear with highly colored accounts of the routine verdict. Headlines bellowed that the heroic two-fisted attack of Godoy had been frustrated by the rawest kind of a gyp, and the general impression that many persons down there must have gotten was that the Cabinet itself saw to it that Louis kept the title.

The Louis-Godoy movies might have cooled off the South Americans and brought them out of that spell the enthusiastic announcers cast over them. But the films that went down there were cut and edited for South American consumption. They did a terrific business down there. Godoy was telling us the other day that more persons in South America saw them than any other film that ever came to the country. And from the way they were edited, Godoy plainly won the fight.

The reports of the first fight—the ones sent by air and wire to South America—were not really vicious. The joyous enthusiasm and surprise of seeing the lowly Godoy still upright (or practically so) after 15 rounds reflected itself strongly in the accounts. The "robbery" slant was put on the accounts at the point of consumption.

We point this out to differentiate between these reports and some of those bitter anti-American reports sent back home by the German writers who came here with Max Schmeling. That fellow Hellmis, who was killed the other day during the German advance on Paris, sent back a story to Der Angriff accusing Gov. Lehman of rewarding Gen. Phelan with a lifelong pension of $7,500 a year for lending his support to the regrettable sidetracking Schmeling got in his scheduled fight with Braddock. It apparently didn't matter to him that Lehman, of course, hardly knew the fight was taking place, that Phelan's appointment isn't permanent and that Phelan heartily tried to stop the deal which Schmeling got.

But vicious or not, the stories and blows-by-blows which go to South America tonight will retard the jumpy relations of the two continents—unless Louis makes it indisputably one-sided, or knocks the fellow cold, as I think he will in about the sixth. But if it's close and the duke goes against Godoy (however fairly) we know the job of the man who lives at 1600 Pennsylvania avenue in Washington is going to be a little tougher when he tries again to convince our neighbors to the south that we love 'em and that we need each other in this new and terrible world.

Cards Guilty Of 7 Errors In Wild Game

Owen, Durocher Swap Punches as Players Swarm On Ebbit's Field

By the Associated Press

Brooklyn, June 19.—The surge of the St. Louis Cardinals collapsed under the strain of seven errors tonight and the Brooklyn Dodgers fought their way to an 8-to-3 victory that lifted them into a virtual tie for first place in the National League.

Both clubs showed the tension of hard feelings and harsh words that followed yesterday's "beaning" of Joe Medwick, but the Cards were affected most.

Catcher Mickey Owen was banished from the game in the third inning for getting into a fist fight with Manager Leo Durocher of the Dodgers and Shortstop Martin Marion was so jittery he made four errors, three of them in one inning.

Owen was forced at second base and as he started toward the dugout he and the Brooklyn manager-shortstop exchanged words which brought them together, fists flying, near second base.

Every player on both teams rushed to separate them and it looked for a minute as though a riot might grow out of the incident, which obviously dated back to the "beaning" of Brooklyn's Medwick yesterday and the hard feelings that resulted.

When the field was cleared, Owen was banished from the game, but Durocher returned to his shortstop position. Don Padgett took Owen's place in the St. Louis line-up.

Each team made nine hits, but Whitlow Wyatt kept his quota spaced except for two innings, and came out of the Wild West show with his sixth victory of the year, to the noisy satisfaction of 31,249 fans who jammed Ebbets Field to capacity.

Louis Quoted at 1 to 5 In Godoy Bout Tonight

30,000 Expected to See Title Clash; Both Fighters Confident of Victory; Fight Listed For 15 Rounds; Louis to Get 40 Per Cent

By the Associated Press

New York, June 19.—Facing the most dangerous foreign challenge to the world's heavyweight championship since Max Schmeling won it sitting on the floor, Joe Louis makes the eleventh defense of fistiana's richest prize tomorrow night in Yankee Stadium against rough, tough Arturo Godoy, of Chile.

Some 30,000 are expected when the shooting starts at 9 p. m. E. S. T. They contribute to an anticipated gross gate of more than $150,000. Of the net, Louis receives 40 per cent. Godoy will get 17½ for the tussle of 15 rounds or less.

From the "just-before-the-battle, mother" statements of both men, it appeared there would be two winners. Louis, who took a split decision over the Chilean fisherman last February, although befuddled by Godoy's peculiar crouching style, predicted he was "going to make this one as short as possible." Arturo, the arrogant, recalling he was weakened in the last meeting by a cold which had affected him for six days before the bout, insisted he would be the "first heavyweight

Indians Defeat Nats Behind Allen, 4 to 1

Chase Losing Pitcher; Washington Helpless With Men on Base

By Shirley Povich.
Post Staff Writer

Cleveland, June 19.—There is no need to brace yourself, folks. Nothing of a startling nature occurred today as the Nats met the Cleveland Indians. It was a mere repetition of what has come to be the Nats' daily ritual. They lost another ball game—their sixth straight.

They were able to stir up only one run against the pitching of Johnny Allen and took a 4-to-1 beating from the Indians. Washington's hitless wanderers succeeded only in ruining what had been a proud record of Allen's. All of his previous three victories were shutouts.

The Nats continued the evil tenor of their ways today to tighten their grip on eighth place. Save in one instance, they were helpless with runners in scoring position. When they weren't striking out, they were pounding the ball to all corners of the infield. The Nats made eight hits, at the most inopportune moments.

Ken Chase was the losing pitcher. That was established as early as the second inning when he walked two batters and gave up three of their nine hits to the Indians. The second inning putsch of the Cleveland insurrectionists fetched them three runs and, as it proved, the ball game. Johnny Allen was no drawback to himself in that inning. He belted a two-bagger that figured in a pair of Indians' runs.

The only news of a shocking nature is that today the Nats' receivco some capable relief pitching. Joe Krakauskas and Joe Haynes, working the last three innings, held the Indians scoreless. But the Nats were unable to get back into the ball game.

The details of that Cleveland second inning are these:

Chase walked Beau Bell. Ben Chapman singled through the box and Bell moved to third with the help of a horrible throw by Center Fielder Johnny Welaj. Chase walked Ray Mack on four straight pitches to fill the bases. Keltner hit into a

Thornton Lee Hurls Shut-out Over Yanks, 1-0

N. Y. Suffers Fourth Straight Loss; 8th Inning Rally Decisive

By the Associated Press

Chicago, June 19.—Thornton Lee outlasted Marius Russo today in a left-handed pitching duel to give the Chicago White Sox a 1-to-0 victory over the New York Yankees. It was the world champion's fourth consecutive setback and second straight by a southpaw.

For seven innings young Russo allowed the Sox only two hits, but in the eighth Mike Kreevich and Joe Kuhel opened with singles and after Taft Wright grounded into a double play at third, Luke Appling singled Kuhel home. Moose Solters also singled, but Russo got out with no further damage.

The Yanks pecked away at Lee for seven hits, but only in the seventh did they get as many as two in an inning.

College Head to Assume Athletic Directorship

Lafayette, Ind., June 19 (AP).—President Edward C. Elliott of Purdue University said today he would assume the duties of athletic director at the school, and probably would fill the office for some time in order to afford the university trustees ample opportunity to select a successor to Noble E. Kizer.

Kizer's recent death made vacant the athletic directorship, which includes supervision of physical education for men.

Cocoa Kid Wins Decision Over Bill McDowell

4,000 Witness Bout 10-Round Fight At Griffith Stadium

By Al Hailey

Wild Bill McDowell come off the floor in the seventh round to live right up to his reputation as a "wild man," but it was too late—Louis Kid Cocoa managed to survive a savage tenth-round assault and take an unanimous decision last night at Griffith Stadium.

After trailing badly throughout the early rounds, the Dallas, Tex., fighter tore out of his corner in the tenth to drive the Cocoa Kid from rope to rope while Washington's largest fight crowd in a year—4,000 fans—screamed for a knockout.

McDowell Fains

A 4-to-1 underdog against the No. 1 welterweight championship contender, McDowell dived into the Puerto Rican, swinging from all directions. He had Cocoa reeling and staggering at the ball and had the Kid's face a mass of blood, his left eye puffed and closing.

From the seventh, when Cocoa tapped him with a light left and then drove across a right that sent Bill spinning to the canvas, McDowell began to gain strength—largely through a sense of desperation.

But it was no go—Bill tried to trade punches with the Kid in midring in the eighth, but Cocoa drove him back with lefts and rights. Throughout the battle,the more rugged and rangy Puerto Rican proved himself the master at the art of jabbing. Only McDowell's clever footwork and skill kept him out of earlier trouble.

Cocoa Strengthens Bid

It was not all the Cocoa Kid's way, however, for Bill repeatedly caught him with that wild, looping right hand and those worrisome left jabs—but not as often as he caught from Cocoa.

On The Post score sheet, McDowell took the grst round, fought the third, sixth and eighth on even terms and won the tenth easily. The rest were Cocoa's.

By his victory Cocoa strengthened his bid for a bout with Welter Champion Henry Armstrong and won his forty-second straight fight. It brought McDowell's streak of five straight local victories to an end.

Mrs. Leo Walper Eliminates Mrs. Stokes in District Tourney

Manor Star Bows, 3 and 2, At Kenwood

Defending Titleholder To Meet Mrs. Meckley Today; Chevy Chase Contingent Advances

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

The Chevy Chase contingent took over District women's championship quarter-finals yesterday at Kenwood as Louise Claytor and Elizabeth Houghton scored somewhat surprising victories to move into the semifinal round today as opponents.

In the upper bracket the medalist and Middle Atlantic champion, Mrs. Walter R. Stokes, was victim No. 2 in the steady march of defending titleholder Mrs. Leo Walper, of Capital, who put the Manor Club star out on the sixteenth hole, 3 and 2.

Mrs. Walper's opponent today will be a former champion and Kenwood's hope for the title, Mrs. Betty P. Meckley, who defeated Sallie Whipple, of Washington Golf and Country Club, 4 and 3.

Easy Victory

Miss Claytor's victory over Mrs. Richard Kreuzberg, of Kenwood, was not as astounding as the score. The Chevy Chase champion won easily, 5 and 4, after leading, 5 up, at the turn. Miss Houghton survived a late rally by the Manor Club champion, Mrs. L. G. Pray, to win, 2 and 1.

The match today between the two clubmates and teammates on the championship Chevy Chase aggregation will be Miss Claytor's first appearance in the semifinal rounds of a major tournament, while Miss Houghton reached the semifinals of the District once and the finals on another occasion, where she lost to Winnie Faunce.

The Stokes-Walper encounter was tabbed as anybody's match and for 13 holes it was just that. After starting with bogey sixes, Mrs. Walper won the second hole and then won and lost every other hole through the eighth. The champion turned 1 up but at par 3 by Mrs. Stokes on the tenth squared the match. They halved the next three and then Mrs. Walper won three in a row for the match, the fourteenth, where she played a great iron shot out of the rough; the fifteenth, where Mrs. tSokes was over the green in 3 and took 6, and the sixteenth with a regulation par while Mrs. Stokes pushed her second shot and missed a 4-foot putt to keep the match alive.

Went Out in 40

Mrs. Meckley was out in 40 against Miss Whipple, upset victor over Mrs. Hill in the first round, and 3 up. She took 6 on the eleventh and was only 2 up but she won the next right back and after it looked as though she would lose the fifteenth hole she won it instead with a fine iron shot to the green and the match was over.

Mrs. Kreuzburg, who was doing suprisingly well in the tournament considering she had not played for eight months, found all her bad shots catching up in one day while Miss Claytor was doing everything right. They started with sixes and Miss Claytor picked up on the second but from there on she fired seven consecutive fours and won six of the holes.

Mrs. Houghton was out in 40 and 1 up on Mrs. Pray and built the margin to three up and four to play. Mrs. Pray won 15 with a par but missed chances to win the next two holes, losing on the seventeenth.

Mrs. J. Phillips and Mrs. H. J. Simons were winners in three and four extra hole matches, the former defeating Mrs. George Goetzman, 1 up in 22 holes in the fourth consolation while Mrs. Simons defeated Mrs. Gross on the twenty-first hole of a second flight match.

Bachelor Philip Takes 'Chase At Delaware

Wins Top Money Of $7,400; Breaks Course Record

By the Associated Press

Delaware Park, Del., June 19.—Bachelor Philip, sporting the blue and yellow racing silks of F. Ambrose Clark, won the third running of the $6,000 added Georgetown Steeplechase Handicap here today in new record time.

Fencing faultlessly and showing surprising speed on the flat, the 9-year-old gelded son of Herod Philip and Bachelor's Valley cleared the 15 stiff obstacles on the exacting 2 miles stakes course in 3:45 3-5 seconds, four-fifths of a second faster than the mark made by Our Sailor, under 137 pounds, in 1938. Today Bachelor Philip packed 138 pounds. The victory earned him top money of $7,400.

Chasing the Clark colorbearer under the wire was Mrs. L. E. Stoddard, jr.'s Straw Boss, but he was a well-beaten pursuer, finishing eight lengths to the rear of the winner. Farndale, from the Emile Pfizer Stable, was third, a half length back of Straw Boss and two lengths better than Thomas Hitchcock's Satilla. Our Sailor, Torturer and Good Chance were the other starters and they finished in that order.

The good mid-week crowd of 6,500 sent Satilla portward the Georgetown favorite. Bachelor Philip was coupled in the betting with Torturer and the entry paid $12.20 straight.

Bachelor Philip, jumping boldly, made all his own pace, and although Our Sailor challenged sternly for a turn of the field, the Clark charger was never seriously menaced. Both Good Chance and Our Sailor stopped after going a mile. Straw Boss came up from a rear position as did Farndale, but they faded when Frankie Bellhouse let out a warp on Bachelor Philip. Torturer was outrun at all stages. Satilla was slow getting started and he fenced poorly during the first mile.

Major McClure Sets Golf Mark At Burning Tree

Shoots Six Under Par 66 on Long Par 72 Course

Maj. John E. McClure played his greatest round of golf yesterday at Burning Tree, a 6 under par 66 for the long par 72 course, a new non-competitive amateur course record.

The major, who was runner-up to Page Hufty in the club championship finals last week, was on the second green in 2 and dropped an eagle putt while his only bogey was on the third. He birdied the ninth to be out in 34, and after starting with a birdie on ten dropped three in a row on 14, 15 and 16 for a 32 back.

He was playing with John F. Brooks and Col W. A. Julian, Treasurer of the United States.

Maj. McClure's card:

Little Challenges Ed Oliver in Series of Matches

By the Associated Press

Chicago, June 19.—Ed Oliver lost his chance at the national open golf championship on a technicality, but the Hornell, N. Y., pro can still have a shot at the champion.

Lawson Little, who defeated Gene Sarazen in a playoff for the open title, said tonight he would invite Oliver to meet him in a series of three-out-of-five 36-hole matches within the next month. Site of the matches, he added, would be determined later.

Oliver also tied for the open crown in the event at Cleveland almost two weeks ago, but was disqualified for the playoff because he began his final round ahead of schedule.

Flood Seeks Tie for 1st In City League

Miller Nine Is Foe Sunday; Klein Title Chances at Stake

Though their efforts in the first half of National City "A" League are at an end for the time being, players of Klein Tavern Club will assemble in a body at the South Ellipse Sunday for the game that may make or break their title chances.

J. C. Flood and Miller Furniture nines meet then, and Klein's leading delegation will be strongly in favor of Miller. A victory for the latter gives Klein uncontested hold of midway honors, though a Flood triumph will necessitate a playoff between the winner and the Tavernmen.

Led by two of the youngest managers in the city—"Ugly" Littman and Gillie Steele, respectively—Flood and Klein have already squared off once this season. In that battle Klein eked out a decision, though not without considerable trouble.

A three-way tie for the lead in B section will also be affected by Sunday's action. Washington Home Improvement, Plaza Tile and St. Francis—the deadlocked clubs—all enter crucial games. The first and third com e to grips at the South Ellipse and Plaza meets the fifth place Variety A. C.

Internal Strife at No. 8 Precinct, Or Who Deserves the Uniforms

Softball Loss by 'Varsity' Expected To Bring Bitter Battle to Head

What the "scrubs" at No. 8 Police Precinct—those despised outcasts who didn't get uniforms—will say now is too awful to even consider. No. 8's "varsity" lost another softball game yesterday, 16-13, to No. 6 and its 6-run uprising in the second extra inning.

No. 8 put up a whale of a battle, as the score may indicate, but it lost out in the end. That's the point the "scrubs" will bring up whenever they get a chance. They'll also hint that, given the confidence which goes with beautiful blue and white softball suits, they might have done a lot better than the "varsity."

The background of No. 8's internal athletic strife goes like this: With the organization of the Friendship Softball League some months ago, No. 8 decided to do the thing up right. If it was to have a sports club worthy of the name, that club must dress the part. With this in mind, a dance was given and proceeds used to buy the only set of uniforms in the league.

Immediately began a hot race for team berths and the classic attire that went with them. After numerous trials the "varsity" team was finally selected.

Players who missed the big team then fell into the "scrub" classification, which they didn't mind too much. But when the "varsity" went out and lost a 10-1 decision to No. 7, an old rival from Georgetown, by way of proving ability, a howl went up from the "scrubs." They thought they could uphold the honor of No. 8 and wear the coveted uniforms with much more telling effect.

Yesterday's "varsity" loss will be hard to smooth over. If various members of the losers are found hoodling, or hiding out on duty, by inquiring inspectors, it may not be because their feet hurt. Maybe they fear the caustic tongues of the "scrubs."

Except for the fact that it lost, No. 8 turned in an impressive performance against No. 6. Private F. E. Wright, of No. 8, matched the home run by Private Bradley, of No. 6. The losers belted Officer Clatterbuck for 24 hits, while No. 6 was amassing only 21. And it was what No. 8 considered a lucky spree that finally won out. No. 6 registered seven hits and a base on balls to score six times in the ninth and win the game on a Bethesda diamond.

Families of both teams made a picnic of the thing while their breadwinners were locked in mortal combat. They listened to automobile radios, walked their dogs, kept the youngsters from getting "beaned," and generally enjoyed themselves. No. 8 players also seemed to enjoy themselves, but they'll hear about it later.

Tangled Wins Astoria Stake At Belmont

Key Ring Disqualified In Filly Race; Maemante Runs Second

By the Associated Press

Aqueduct, N. Y., June 19.—A dead heat and a disqualification marked the thirty-fourth running of the Astoria Stakes, 5½-furlong test for 2-year-old fillies, here this muggy afternoon. After Mrs. Payne Whitney's Tangled and Mrs. A. Schuttinger's Key Ring had finished on even terms, a length and a half in front of Maemante, 1-to-3 favorite, the three riders appeared before the stewards. Key Ring's number was taken down. This made the result Tangled, Maemante and Black Rage. Only four started.

Maemante, winner of the Hialeah Juvenile Championship Stakes last winter and more recently the heroine of the Fashion Stakes at Belmont Park, was bothered repeatedly in the running and probably was best. The report from the officials was that Alfred Robertson, on Key Ring, came over on Eddie Arcaro, who rode Tangled, and forced the latter over on Maemante, piloted by Basil James. Also, it was said that Robertson hollered to Arcaro to block James when the latter was trying to come through on the inside in the stretch. Many thought that Arcaro interfered with Maemante on the backstretch.

Tangled, paying $9.50 for $2, finished in 1:06 3-5, and earned $4,025 in purse money. Her odds and share of the purse were not affected by the dead heat, because Key Ring was disqualified.

Maemante broke in front the rail, but quickly dropped back, apparently bothered by Tangled, until she was seven lengths behind the leader after a half-mile had been covered. Tangled dashed into a clear lead, meanwhile, with Key Ring second and Black Rage third.

Morton Littman to Manage School Stars In Charity Game

Young Pilot Takes Post's Benefit Job

All-District Nine To Face Heurich In Stadium Clash On June 29

To Morton Littman, the youngest and most successful unlimited sandlot baseball manager in town, yesterday went the job of masterminding the All-District Schoolboy nine which will face the Heurich Brewers at Griffith Stadium June 29.

The pugnacious boss of J. C. Flood's representative in the National City League thus joined hundreds of other D. C. amateur ball players and fans in giving their wholehearted and gratis support to Sandlot Day—the Washington Post-sponsored event for the benefit of the Red Cross.

Though a mere "babe" among managers with his 20 years, Littman will probably be one of the schoolboys' biggest talking points during the next week. Last year he piloted Flood to second place in his league, and this season has the Plumbers breathing on the neck of the league leaders again. His first remark after taking the berth was: "When do we practice?"

First scrimmage for the team has been set for Tuesday, June 25, at 3 p. m., on the Ellipse. All high school players selected on The Washington Post all-star first and second teams and given honorable mention were urged by Littman to be present.

Meanwhile, Vic Baratte, local softball mogul, announced that he would send one of the strongest tens in the city against Senate Beer in th esoftball clash, which will open hostilities at Griffith Stadium. His selections will be made from the 14 teams in his Sports Center League. All players approached to date have gladly given their consent to play, as much in an effort t oassist the Red Cross as to get a crack at the powerful Beer club. Baratte served warning his all-star delegation would be "out to get" Abe Rosenfield, Senate's practically unbeatable southpaw hurler.

U. S. C. Tackles Now Plentiful On Redskin Line

Stoecker, on the 'Skins' draft list, and Thomassin shared the left tackle spot on the Trojans' eleven last year and both played in the Rose Bowl game against Tennessee. Their coaches informed Ray Flaherty Thomassin was a better pro prospect than Stoecker, although the new recruit was not on the draft list. Thomassin is the thirty-fourth player under contract.

Bucs Defeat Bees, 5-1, to Take Sixth

Errickson Beaten First in Contest Delayed by Rain

By the Associated Press

Boston, June 19.—Pittsburgh today moved into sixth place in the National League and dropped the Bees to seventh by registering a 5-to-1 success in a contest delayed 45 minutes when rain fell in the fifth inning.

Dick Errickson, who yielded 3 runs in the second and 2 in the fifth, suffered his first loss of the year. Pittsburgh scored in the second on two singles, a pass and a double.

After Sisti's error and Pitcher Joe Bowman's double in the fifth, rain started to fall, and when the teams resumed Elliott was purposely walked, filling the bases. In an attempt to catch Elliott off first, Hassett missed Berres' throw and Lopez scored. Van Robays walked and Arky Vaughan's fly counted Bowman.

Midwest Recommends 60-Day Open Season

Mason City, Iowa, June 19 (AP).—Midwest fish and game commissioners, last night conditionally recommended a 60-day open season on migratory waterfowl for the north central area of the United States.

The resolution, passed in a meeting here, suggested that the United States Biological Survey first determine whether waterfowl population is at a high enough level to permit the extension. Last year the season was 45 days long.

Tigers Run Streak to Six Games As Newsom Gets 8th Straight Victory; Schoolboy Rowe Continues Comeback

By the Associated Press

Detroit, June 19.—The Detroit Tigers climbed into second place in the American League standings, ran their winning streak to six games and helped two of their pitchers better impressive records by thumping the Philadelphia Athletics twice today. Detroit won the opener, 5 to 4, in ten innings and scored a 9-to-4 rout in the nightcap.

Louie (Buck) Newsom chalked up his eighth straight pitching triumph in the first contest, Hank Greenberg singling Barney McCosky home from second with the winning run off Nelson Potter. Newsom, who won 20 games last season, has not been beaten since opening day when he bowed to the St. Louis Browns. Frank Higgins, of the Tigers, and Sam Chapman, of the A's, hit homers in this game.

In the second contest Lynwood Rowe, unbeaten in his comeback bid this season, scored his fifth consecutive victory. Rowe retired after yielding four runs in the eighth, Alton Benton finishing.

Barney McCosky was Detroit's leading clouter, getting five hits in nine trips to the plate in the two engagements.

Va. Golf Champ To Miss National Play

Portsmouth, Va., June 19 (AP).—Mrs. Lily Harper Martin, young Portsmouth golf star, who recently won her sixth Virginia State Women's championship, has decided not to compete in the National Women's Meet at Del Monte, Calif., this summer.

"The trip is too long for me to make," stated the queen of the Old Dominion women golfers.

Bobby Riggs, Miss Marble Are Net Victors

Advance in Clay Courts Tourney; Riggs Wins in Doubles

By the Associated Press

Chicago, June 19.—Robert Riggs and Alice Marble came through victorious again today in the National Clay Courts Championships.

Riggs, top seeded in the men's division, got started slowly, then disposed of Max Davidson, of Chicago, 4—6, 6—3, 6—2, 7—5, in the third round of the men's singles. Paired with Charles Hare, of England, he also hurdled the first round in the doubles competition. The two defeated Harris Everett and Alex Guerry, of Chapel Hill, N. C., 7—5, 6—1, 6—2.

Meantime Miss Marble reached the women's single semifinals with a 7—5, 6—3 victory over Mary Arnold, of Los Angeles, her doubles partner.

The only dent in the seeded ranks resulted from Everett's victory over Henry Prusoff, of Seattle. Prusoff, who was seventh in the rankings, lost 7—5, 6—3, 6—3.

Frank Parker, of Pasadena, defending champion in the singles, erased his fellow townsman, David Freeman, 6-2, 7-5, 6-2; Don McNeill, of Oklahoma City, eliminated another Californian, Jack Kramer, 6-1, 6-4, 8-6; Bryan Grant, of Atlanta, was forced into a 24-game set with Jimmy Evert, of Chicago, before emerging victor, 6-3, 6-3, 11-13, 6-2.

Garner Mulloy, of Coral Gables, Fla., went four sets to defeat Robert Peacock, of Los Angeles, but the third-seeded Welby Van Horn, of Los Angeles, had the most difficult siege. He fially turned back Chicago's Gardner Larned, 1-6, 6-4, 7-5, 4-6, 6-4.

Tomorrow's men's features send Everett, Prusoff's conqueror, against Riggs, and match McNeill with Grant. In the women's singles division, second-seeded Helen Bernhard, of New York, will face Catherine Wolf, of Elkhart, Ind., in one quarter-final, while Miss Marble, playing late in the day, will have a chance to reach the finals by overcoming Virginia Wolfenden, of Berkeley, Calif.

Bill Ackerman — On Fishing

Stripers are being taken in many places along the Eastern Shore of Maryland by float-lining and chumming with live shore shrimp.

ACKERMAN

Capt. Randolph Harrison, of Tilghmans Island, seems the most consistent in taking them in this sporty manner, his catches often running as high as 25, and weighing up to 12 pounds.

It is hard to tell what the shrimp chummers who fish under Bloody Point Light day in and day out bring in, for if there ever was a tight-mouthed bunch, they are. To begin fishing they wait until everyone else is gone, or get there before other boats arrive—just a certain spot north of the lighthouse, so that the tide carries their chum line and bait down close to the rocks.

Capt. Bob Lee, of Shadyside, has reported several catches of stripers taken trolling in the mouth of Eastern Bay, where all his boats are fishing these days due to the fact that the best hardhead fishing north of the Gooses is on the Eastern Shore.

Over the past week-end good catches of hardheads were few and far between in the upper bay, particularly north of West River and up to Baltimore Light and Belvidere Shoals.

Capt. Taft Tippett, our main source of information for conditions in the Point Lookout section, tells us the early morning fishing has dropped off, and that the early afternoon and evening is the best time.

And then some readers wonder why we stick to one or two persons in each area for our news! We think that's answer enough right there. Any time a guide will deliberately lose business for correct reporting we think he is worth standing by.

National Outboard Motor Association, after a careful survey, estimates there will be more than 500,000 outboards used by fishermen this season. These anglers will constitute the greater portion of the outboard fraternity.

This great increase is natural, for it permits many to go fishing several times for each time they could afford to go when they had to hire power boats, and accounts for the great increase this season in the queries of where rowboats may be obtained.

St. L. Overcomes Lead, Defeats Boston, 6 to 4

By the Associated Press

St. Louis, June 19.—Yes, believe it or not, the Browns beat the Red Sox again today, and they did it the hard way.

Overcoming a 4-run handicap, the fighting Brownies scored runs in bursts of two and passed the league-leaders, 6 to 4, for their second victory over Boston and their fourth in a row. They took a double-header from Yankees before the Red Sox came to town.

Walter Judnich, the young outfielder whom the Browns obtained from the Yankee chain, and Roxie Lawson, former Detroit pitcher, were the men of the hour in the Browns' victory.

Harris Is Routed

The Red Sox had teed off against Bob Harris, who started for St. Louis, getting three triples, two doubles and two singles for four runs before Manager Fred Haney decided it was Harris' day. Lou Finney hit two of the triples and Bobby Doerr got the other.

Lawson then went in to pitch and he held the poweful Boston bats in check while his teammates, Judnich in particular, began working on Herb Hash.

In the fourth inning, Judnich came up with Harold Clift on base and drove out his seventh home run of the season. The Browns loaded the bases in the fifth on Roy Cullenbine's single, Rip Radcliff's double and Clift's base on balls. Judnich came through with a single, scoring two more runs.

Don Heffner Bunts

With men on first and third as a result of a walk and a single in the eighth inning, Don Heffner dropped a squeeze bunt, scoring Judnich, and to make the victory all the more certain, Bobby Swift drove in another run with a single.

A terrifying trio—Finney, Jimmy Foxx and Ted Williams—faced Lawson in the ninth, but he bore down and retired them in order.

Vendor's Lien Scores in Rosslyn Purse at Charles Town

Din Second, Vanelder 3d In Feature

Kelley Up in Length and Half Victory; Pays $8.80 Mutuel

By Walter Haight

A Staff Correspondent

Charles Town, W. Va., June 19.—Racing over a track deep in mud, Jayne Waugh's Vendor's Lien accounted for his fourth victory in seven tries at this meeting when he won the Rosslyn Bowling Center Purse, featuring the midweek program at this point. Shaken up by Jockey Willie Kelley approaching the finish line, Vendor's Lien held a margin of a length and a half over Mrs. K. N. Gilpin's Din at the end of the 6½ furlongs. Third money in the field of eight went to P. W. Rudacille's Vanelder.

With his mud-running ability questionable, the winning son of Vanderpool paid $8.80 and was clocked in 1:23 2-5, fair time under the holding conditions. Art Brown, of WOL, presented the winning owner with a trophy donated by E. Galt Davis, of Washington bowling fame.

Vendor's Lien always was close up and Jockey Kelley elected to steady the gelding along within striking distance of the pace battle between Swift Air and Lulu Khayyam. On the backstretch, Kelley asked his mount for speed and the gelding tore through the two leaders to take command. Swift Air and Lulu Khayyam attempted to keep up and then faded when Vendor's Lien opened a good advantage.

In the stretch, Din proved the lone challenger. This 3-year-old responded to Jockey John Hernandez' drive to gain ground but was unable to threaten seriously as Kelley shook up Vendor's Lien.

Trainer "Chuck" Frost, who says he "never trained a maiden," sent his wife's Dabs, a 4-year-old gelding, to victory in the first race. The son of Ha Ha finished two and a half lengths in advance of Dona Montez with Cautious Bo third in a field of eight. This was the first victory of Dabs' career.

There was a $66.20 mutuel waiting for those who coupled C. L. Parsons' Blox and J. E. Colvin's Lyde in the daily double. Blox came from behind to defeat, among others, Zump and Justa Jimmie, while Lyde led all the way to turn back Count Me and Dancing Cloud. Blox paid $16.80 and Lyde brought $6.80.

Selections at Charles Town

Dear Al:

Jockey Sammy Palumbo was conspicuous by his absence from yesterday's program. The Flushing, N. Y., boy who has been riding despite a cold, finally had to give up due to an infected ear. Regardless of whether you boo him or cheer him you will have to admit that Sammy is king of the smaller tracks. He hasn't the pep of some of his younger rivals but he has lots of horse sense between his ears and he makes full use of it. Three horses lost shoes in Tuesday's mud races. Quaternary, Small Change and Barraca were the victims. Art Brown didn't lose his shoes yesterday, but he did lose his shirt. Roman Boy, the speed merchant has been shipped back to P. S. Faulconer's farm near Charlottesville, Va. Roman Boy failed to reach the form he showed hereabouts last summer and will be rested for fall campaigning. Today is West Virginia day and the feature has been named "Montani Semper Liberi," which means, I'm told, "All mountaineers are free." However, that doesn't go at the track gate. While the entries were being drawn yesterday morning it rained so hard that Racing Secretary Freddie Burton almost wrote the following conditions for one race: "For 3-year-olds and upward which have not swam 6 furlongs or more since the Johnstown flood. Shower baths not considered." Don't tell a soul but there's a "ringer" at this track. If you don't believe it, look closely next time that four-mule team comes by pulling the harrow. That one in the front, left position can't fool me by wiggling his ears. I know he's not a mule, he's a horse. Could it be possible that Trainer Cook is trying to earn a little extra change with the Bennings Stable's Chief Evergreen? Attention Nora: Chillie Ebbie goes today. See you on the rail.

BILL.

First race—Timber Storm must carry 122 pounds, but looks like the class of this field, and I'm forced to string along. Happy Hostess will have her race track and must be reckoned as a chief contender. Welsh Star and Miss Wing like the short sprint course.

Second race—Clay Hill ran away before that last, and I'm tossing that out. Likes an off track and appears ready to score in this company. Mayfern is good now and will be prominent despite high weight. Danzig is in light.

Third race—Netta Wood turned in a fair effort, and, with only 105 pounds, could be the right one in a field of cheap sprinters. Dark Pony will like the going and is a threat. Connamista has been quitting, but is dropping down.

Fourth race—Single Ply showed one race here that, if repeated, would down company of this caliber. Radio Wave flashed speed in that recent effort and was shut off. May go well. Supreme Kin is a possibility. Grand Waltz, if sent back, would have to be respected.

Fifth race—Lena Girl appears to have something on the field in the day's feature. Needs only the right handling. Miss Maker, in light, showed much improvement last out and is a threat. Bob Junior should go well if taken off the reserve list.

Sixth race—Sundrops revealed excellent form last out. Seems ready to defeat this kind. Golden Mayne is the one to beat. Kai-Min, a doubtful starter, had trouble in that recent test.

Seventh race—Chalatour ran a dull race in that first test here. However, this one has speed and could be the right one. Trostar likes the route and will be in the thick of contention. War Rumor has been inconsistent, but has plenty of foot.

Eighth race—Canimar has been conditioning and could be ready to defeat this field. The distance is right. Pin Hooker showed me enough in that last to indicate better things. Dian is good, but I can't go for the rider.

Substitute races—If No. 1 is used, I'll take National, Hurdy Gurdy and Chide. If No. 2 is used, I'll take Red Wings, Way Out and Good Gracious.

Best bet—Lena Girl.

Commodities Move Ahead; Cotton Leads

Wheat, Corn Buoyant; Gains Shown by Tin, Rubber and Copper

By the Associated Press

Gains predominated in major futures markets yesterday. Buyers acted decisively, although speculation over Axis terms still overshadowed other considerations.

Cottons gained 40 to 75 cents a bale at New York.

Tin recovered 1½ cents a pound of Tuesday's 4½ cent drop. Rubber jumped ½ cent and more, and hides added around 1-3 cent. Other staples marked up included copper, cocoa, wool tops and cottonseed oil.

Rally Erases Grain Losses

Chicago, June 19 (AP).—Wheat prices closed ⅛-¾ cent higher today after having been as much as 1½ cents net lower earlier in the session.

July contracts finished at 78½-78⅝ and September at 78⅝ compared with early lows of 76½ and 76¾ respectively.

Although many traders preferred to await more definite news regarding the peace terms to be imposed on France, trade was moderately active but largely represented professional transactions.

Corn led the recovery of grains and closed ⅝-¾ cent higher than yesterday, July 62, September 60¼. Oats closed ⅝-¾up; rye ¾-⅞ higher and lard 3-5 higher.

Traders said marketing of new wheat was running behind last year because of the later harvest and because much of the crop was going into storage, with prices below Government loan rates. Storings were heavy last year, however, as prices were 8 to 9 cents lower than they are now while the loan rate was only a cent lower.

Some grain interests estimated about half of the world market for wheat has been affected directly by war, much of it being eliminated for the time being by military occupation. This, together with prospects of increased North American wheat surpluses, has sharpened interest in possible reopening of the European market either through restoration of purchasing power or administration of relief.

A year ago daily production averaged 3,447,050 barrels.

Gasoline production during the week rose to 11,767,000 barrels compared with 11,627,000 the previous week. Consumption continued to run ahead of production, however, reducing stocks of finished and unfinished gasoline to 97,660,000 barrels at the end of the week from 99,471,000 barrels a week earlier. 8,391 Banks Report Gain In Year's Net

New York, June 19 (AP).—Net operating earnings of State banks engaged in commercial banking totaled $192,401,000 in 1939, a moderate increase over 1938, according to the sixth annual survey of the American Banker Association issued today.

The rise, said the association, was due principally to substantial recoveries and profits obtained on securities sold.

The survey covered 8,391 State chartered banks in 44 States and the District of Columbia.

Gross losses on loans and securities amounted to $166,484,000.

Net profits after recoveries and charge-offs but before dividends, which amounted to $92,843,000,000, totaled $168,132,000.

In 34 of the States net profits were higher in 1939 than 1938.

Temporary Halt Reported in Steel Work for France

New York, June 19 (AP).—Production of semifinished and finished steel for France halted at least temporarily this week, Iron Age reported today.

Steel ingot production for the country advanced 1½ points to 87 per cent of capacity.

The Iron Age scrap composite price advanced for the tenth consecutive week to $19.92, a gain of 75 cents over last week.

Economist's View

War Magic Transforms Specter Of Overproduction Into Ally

By Merryle S. Rukeyser
A Special Correspondent.

IN THIS RAPIDLY changing world, the war makers are running up everybody's costs.

No matter how far removed from the theater of conflict, nations everywhere feel compelled to pursue policies which will require citizens to transfer to government a larger share of their own annual product.

Accordingly war or preparation for war spells in economic terms a threat to popular living standards. In a nation at peace, which nevertheless must augment its military preparadness, the only way to mitigate or avoid backsliding in the material well-being of its people is through stepping up total production.

This can be accomplished under proper cooperation among public officials, private business, organized labor and agriculture in a variety of ways. First, through reabsorbing as many of the unemployed as can be trained for productive work. Secondly, through stepping up the productivity of men and women already at work. This may to some extent entail reasonable lengthening of hours of work per week.

IN ANY CIRCUMSTANCE, the fear should no longer be the specter of overproduction. On the contrary, the capacity to produce gives a nation primacy in this hard-boiled world in which we live. In this modern "tough gup" world, airplanes, tanks, swift-moving destroyers—these constitute better national defense than a capacity for eloquent phrase making. If the moral and truly democratic nations can express their benevolent and friendly policies with latent force, then an oasis of civilization will endure and give peoples everywhere new hope.

Obviously, the concomitant of greatly increased spending for armaments will be higher taxes. The equation can be softened only through rigorous economies in all the normal expenditures of government.

Under these realities, the insulated single taxers are still carrying on their propaganda for "a single tax." For example, a fortnightly publication entitled No Taxes, published at Stockton, Calif., thinks that all taxes should be levied on rent.

Curiously enough, depressed economic conditions in the past decade have stumblingly almost brought into fruition the single taxers' dream of the elimination of economic rent. It has been a sorry period to be a landlord. In New York, for example, most of the landlords of apartment houses, hotels and office buildings have been eliminated through the rigorous process of foreclosure, and title to these properties has been transferred to the lending institutions.

TITULAR LANDLORDS have in these depressed times in many instances received no net rent. On the contrary, they have redistributed rent in real estate taxes, in interest and amortization, and in maintenance, depreciation and obsolescence charges.

Yet the millenium has not resulted from the deflation of the landlords.

Irrespective of this, it is naive to assume that one or more sources of taxes can meet the costs of government, without taking into consideration that for decades the costs of government have been multiplying much more rapidly than the population or the national income.

As the activities of government have been multiplied, government has become an increasingly important employer of men and buyer of materials. In terms of the family budget, this means that citizens have been devoting an increasing portion of their income for the acquisition of governmental services. Thus buying power for other things and services has been relatively curtailed.

Stock Trade Curtailed, Prices Hold Firm As Operators Adopt Waiting Attitude; Buoyant Bonds Featured by Rails

New York, June 19.—Financial markets were firm today although not quite as busy as in recent days. Curtailment of trading activity was a reflection of the waiting attitude adopted by big operators until details of the French peace are known. The slightly better price levels were attributed to two main factors. One was the reported enhancement of Wendell L. Willkie's prospects as a G. O. P. Presidential nominee. The other was the British attitude, as expressed by Winston Churchill, that the fight will continue against the Nazi-Fascist legions.

Speculation continued as to the destiny of the French navy and rumors hinted that some French land, air, as well as sea forces, would refuse to obey a surrender order from Petain. No official substantiation for this view was given.

Nazis Offer Steel

The first reverberations in this country of the French defeat was a disclosure that Germany is offering steel products to South American buyers at prices under those quoted in the United States. Moreover, the Nazis are said to be willing to guarantee delivery by October by posting cash forfeits. The news was, of course, interpreted as Hitler strategy to follow up the European military successes with a powerful trade blitzkrieg.

In the meantime a variety of developments other than the political ones, attracted comment on the home front. Steel operations which have been accelerated recently by receipt of urgent French orders, may be reduced a little until it is known if the British want the trucks, airplanes and other munitions originally destined for France. Any slack which may result temporarily in this direction it was estimated, however, will be taken up by higher volume from Canada and Britain as well as the United States defense requirements.

More Orders Pending

In the meantime, orders for 1941 auto model steel are pending and railroads are expected to step up buying. Textile company prospects are enhanced by Army uniform requirements. Announcement that American Woolen had been awarded $4,127,000 contract by the Government for overcoat cloth, attracted interest to the shares today, the common advancing 1½ and the preferred 3½.

Merchandizing issues were ahead rather more than other stocks and a possible explanation was an estimate which received some prominence in the news, that additional $6,000,000,000 will be expended in domestic tourist travel this year because of the chaos in other countries.

Although steel shares as a whole were a little higher, leading issues of the group such as Bethlehem and United States Steel, eased a trifle. Loft was the most active stock of the day and added ⅛ point. Aircraft issues were widely dealt in with Eastern Air Lines, United Air Lines, Curtiss-Wright, Lockheed and Boeing the most prominent.

Copper Issues Off

Copper stocks were down a bit, reflecting the moderately lower metal prices. Automobile and oil issues were around their previous closing levels. Chemicals made the widest advances among specialties, Allied being up 3. Gains of a point or more appeared in Westinghouse, Union Pacific and People's Gas, Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey sold off more than a point. The company is heavily interested in France and in the Far East.

The composite average of the 100 leading stocks ended 0.18 of a point higher with sales of 560,350 shares, the smallest for any full day since June 7. In the bond section some of the domestic corporates were substantially higher and United States Governments firmed somewhat. Speculative interested was noted in some of the German municipals while Italian liens were inclined to ease. Wheat ended ⅛ to ¾ cent a bushel higher. Cotton advanced 8 to 15 points.

Bonds in Quiet Demand

Listed bonds were in quiet demand and poor supply today, with the result that sharp gains were recorded in many issues. Italians were weak in the foreign department, but the rallying tendency was apparent in most others of external origin.

United States Treasury obligations showed small fractional advances and domestic corporate issues were quite strong.

Belgians were marked higher and bonds of other countries overrun by the Germans were well maintained. Argentines were soft, but bonds of other Latin-American countries slowly advanced.

United States Treasury obligations improved by small fractions, the gains ranging from 1-32 to 9.32 point. Longest term bonds were in best demand. New York City Transit Unification 3s were better, and the tone was firm in most high grade utility, railroad and industrial securities.

Speculative railroad bonds were higher by fractions to 4 points, on good car loadings and earnings reports. Both the reorganization rails and the better priced interest payers were in demand. Alleghany Corporation issues advanced in these circumstances. Other groups also reflected steady, if small, buying.

'Regardless of Budget,' Expend for Defense, Declares Group

By the Associated Press

New York, June 19.—The Investment Bankers Association of America today proposed an increase in Government expenditures for military purposes "regardless of the effect on the budget" and an increase in income taxes to pay the cost.

"The Investment Bankers Association believes that no effort should be spared to insure adequate national defense," the association said in a statement. "To this end, the association favors an increase in general taxation for the single purpose of assisting the accomplishment of such a program.

"Fundamentaly we are in favor of a balanced budget but under present circumstances we urge that expenditures be made as quickly as possible for military purposes regardless of the effect of the budget, and that all other expenditures be curtailed so far as possible.

"Specifically we suggest an increase in income taxes, principally through a general broadening of the base structure and such other forms of taxation as will least affect the general economy of the country."

Decision on Texas Oil Curtailment Still Withheld

Austin, Tex., June 19 (AP).—A decision on whether Texas oil production will be curtailed because of the loss of foreign markets through the war will be announced within a few days, it was said today at adjournment of an emergency proration hearing.

The decision will be made by the State railroad commission, oil regulatory body, which conducted the two-day hearing. Several purchasers of oil from the fields said they could not longer maintain their contracts because of lost French markets.

A 15-day shutdown was ordered last summer to bolster falling prices.

Rubber-Steel Armor For Planes Developed

Detroit, Mich., June 19 (AP).—An airplane armor plate of steel combined with a rubber compound has proved equal in bullet penetration resistance to steel armor plate of 20 per cent greater weight, F. B. Davis, jr., president of the United States Rubber Co., announced today.

Davis pointed out the saving in weight could be used "for greater armament, wider armored areas, more speed, greater maneuverability or greater cruising radius."

The new armor plate, developed by the rubber company and tested on firing ranges constructed in old steam pipe tunnels under its plant here, "withstood all shots from various caliber ammunition at all ranges from 200 yards to an extremely close range," Davis said.

Power Output Sets New Top For 4 Months

Week's Total Up 2.6% And Is 11.1% Above Last Year's Level

By the Associated Press

New York, June 19.—Electric power output in the United States jumped to 2,516,206,000 kilowatt hours in the week ended June 15, highest since mid-February, the Edison Electric Institute said today.

Rising industrial activity incident to war and industrial orders helped lift the latest total 2.6 per cent above the 2,452,995,000 kilowatt hours in the preceding week and 11.1 per cent ahead of the 2,264,719,000 a year ago.

The advance was more than seasonally expected and the Associated Press Index of power output, based on 1929-30 as 100, rose to 128.3 from 126.8 in the preceding week and 117.8 a year ago. The Index is adjusted for seasonal and long-term trend.

Paramount Pictures Earnings Show Gain

New York, June 19 (AP).—Earnings of Paramount Pictures, Inc., are running "very substantially ahead" of the June quarter last year, Barney Balaban, president, said at the annual stockholders meeting.

Reviewing operations of the company, Balaban said foreign revenues were about 20 per cent under a year ago due to the war but improved studio methods and better domestic business had kept earnings on the upturn. In this quarter he estimated net income would be about the same as in the first three months of the year, when Paramount earned $1,606,000 after all charges and interest.

Frick Awaits Decision on Medwick Case

No Immediate Action To Be Taken on Star's 'Beaning' Until Later

By the Associated Press

New York, June 19.—An early decision by Ford C. Frick on charges that the "beaning" of Brooklyn Outfielder Joe Medwick by Bob Bowman, of the St. Louis Cardinals, was deliberate appeared remote tonight as the National League president declared he would take no action until the results of an investigation by District Attorney William O'Dwyer's office were known.

Hinting that baseball could keep its own skirts clean, and that he was not interested in the civil aspects of the case, Frick said:

"Even if I do make up my mind, I would not make any announcement under the circumstances. Suppose I should suspend Bowman. That would be taken as proof of his guilt."

Frick spent four hours today interviewing everyone who might throw some light on yesterday's incident, when Medwick was felled and suffered concussion.

Office Is Jammed

He said he had asked only Leo Durocher, Brooklyn manager; Bowman, Johnny Mize, Cardinal first baseman; Pepper Martin, Cardinal outfielder, and Larry MacPhail, Brooklyn Club president, to the hearing, but practically the entire Cardinal team trooped to the league office and before the lengthy testimony was ended many other players, as well as two or three Brooklyn fans, had been called in.

Bowman obviously was nervous. He was called in twice. He later reiterated an earlier statement that Medwick was his friend and the beaning was unintentional.

"I tried to put too much stuff on the ball and it got away," he said. "If I live a thousand years I'll still think that Joe stood there waiting for the ball to curve, and it didn't."

MacPhail was as emphatic in his opinion that the beaning was intentional.

"We presented our case to the effect that we believed it was intentional," he said, "and backed it with the statements of two St. Louis players.

"It's too bad it happened. I think the fellow just made a mistake. But we feel that there should be no reprisals. It's too dangerous."

The fiery MacPhail had cooled off today. Yesterday he rushed over to the Cardinal bench challenging one and all, and took a wild swing at Bowman.

Durocher met some of the Cardinals, including Bowman, in a hotel elevator before yesterday's game, and remarks were passed between Bowman and Durocher which evidently bolstered the idea that the "dusting off" was intentional.

Southworth left the hearing with the assertion that a mountain was being made out of a molehill.

Meanwhile Medwick was confined to Caledonian Hospital. Physicians descibed his condition as a slight concussion. He will probably be out of the line-up for about two weeks.

No Accusation by Joe

In a statement today to Burton B. Turkus, assistant district attorney, Medwick made no accusations.

"No direct threat had been made against me by Bowman," he said. "I saw the ball leave his hand, but that was the last I saw of it."

Turkus said that Durocher and three Brooklyn fans who were in the elevator during the exchange of words would appear in the district attorney's office tomorrow to say that they heard Bowman say to Durocher:

"I'll get you and Medwick."

O'Dwyer's office telephoned during the hearing and asked Frick to send Durocher, Southworth, Coach Charley Dressen, of Brooklyn; Bowman, Catcher Don Padgett, of the Cardinals, and Plate Umpire William Campbell to the office for questioning. Frick replied that he "was not working for the district attorneys office in the case."

O'Dwyer said he was acting because of alleged bad feeling between the ballplayers and in view of contradictory reports.

Frizzell Quits CAA; New Yorker Made Bureau Head

Resignation of one Civil Aeronautics Authority official and the appointment of a director of the new safety bureau and a consultant to the board were announced by the authority yesterday.

Paul J. Frizzell, executive secretary and coordinator since establishment of the office in 1938, will leave the service as soon as the authority's reorganization has been completed, it was announced.

Jerome Lederer, native New Yorker and safety engineer, will head the bureau that will take over functions of the Air Safety Board after July 1. Lederer has had wide air-safety experience both in the United States and Europe, the authority declared.

Thomas G. Early, now administrative assistant to the chairman of the interdepartmental committee in charge of construction of the Washington National Airport, will become consultant to the board and acting secretary July 1.

Nats Score in Sixth

It wasn't until the sixth inning that the Nats produced their lonesome run. They achieved it after two were out. Walker singled to center, Bonura walked and Cecil Travis fetched Walker home with a double to left. In this crisis, Jake Early obliged the Indians with a fly to Weatherly.

Allen was fortunate to escape damage in the first inning after Lewis walked and Bonura singled with two out. Cecil Travis hit a fierce smash back to the box and Allen's foot deflected the ball into the hands of Second Baseman Mack, who made the putout at first.

Zeke Bonura doubled with one out in the fourth, but languished on base, and after Pofahl singled with one out in the seventh, Pinchhitter Sammy West lined out to Boudreau. In the eighth, Buddy Lewis led off with a double against the rightfield wall, but Walker, Bonura and Travis couldn't do anything more about it. In the ninth, Pofahl doubled with two out, whereupon Second Baseman Mack robbed Pinchhitter Buddy Myer of a hit and everybody went home.

30,000 to See Louis-Godoy Bout

champion from South America" when the firing ceases.

Nevertheless, the Broadway bookmakers and the "experts" pouring into town, as usual, for what is always boxing's biggest show, were virtually unanimous in picking Louis to turn the trick again. The Bomber was 1 to 5 to do it any way, and 1 to 2 to do it the hard way—chilling the Chilean before the 15 rounds were up.

This corner goes along with the majority in this one. I pick Louis to flatten Arturo within seven rounds.

"Yep," Louis stated flatly, "this is gonna be a different kind of fight than last time. I'm ready for any style Godoy uses. He's gonna have to straighten up if he wants to win, and when he does—that's all I want. But if he tries to fight the way he did and stay down in a crouch, then I know what to do. I'll keep my title."

Godoy, as confident a punching man as ever jumped into the ring, laughed this off. "I'm in much better condition this time," he pointed out. "I'm not predicting I'll knock Louis out, but I'll be in there trying. And if it has to go the full 15, then Louis will be a beaten man."

Fighters in Good Shape

Both fighters are finely trained. Louis has been punching with his old dynamite in his training camp at Greenwood Lake, N. Y., and, from occasional showings against sparmates, he may elect to try to crouch with the South American in order to hook to the body to straighten him up. Godoy, as solid as the mint and built on the order of a battleship, can take a lot of punishment. He shook off the highest explosives Louis pitched at him last time.

Beyond the fight, a peculiar situation has come up to threaten the United States' monopoly of heavyweight title tea-parties. If Godoy should win, there's a possibility he may take the championship to South America and defend it from there, despite an agreement to tangle with Louis in a return match within 90 days. Promoter Mike Jacobs is to take $25,000 from his purse in tomorrow night's fight to insure the return go, but Godoy and his manager, Al Weill, may be willing to forfeit that amount, expecting to make it up easily in South America.

Five preliminary bouts will support the main go. Steve Belloise, young middleweight knocker-outer from the Bronx, takes on Wicky Harkins, of Philadelphia in the chief eight-rounder. In the event weather forces a postponement, the battle will be postponed one day.

The proceedings will be broadcast over the WJZ-N. B. C. (blue) network.

Man of the Month

The Man of the Month contest is sponsored jointly by The Washington Post and Station WJSV. Following each of the Nats' games, Arch McDonald will award points to Washington players as he deems performances merit. The Man of the Month will be presented with a $50 merchandise order by The Post.

By Arch McDonald
Station WJSV Baseball Broadcaster

The Nats infielders monopolized all of the points yesterday in the Man of the Month contest. Points were distributed as follows on the heels of the defeat at Cleveland.

To Cecil Travis, three points, because he drove in the Nats' only run with a double, and hit the ball hard on three other trips to the plate.

To Jimmy Pofahl, three points, because he singled and doubled in the late innings and played a spectacular defensive game at second base.

To Zeke Bonura, three points, because he singled and doubled, and made two brilliant plays in the infield.

To Buddy Lewis, two points, because he opened the eighth inning with a two-bagger and played a clever game in the field.

The totals:

Dutch Leonard	49	Cecil Travis	18
Ken Chase	33	Sidney Hudson	15
Walter Masterson	30	Jimmy Pofahl	15
George Case	28	Gerald Walker	13
Zeke Bonura	28	Joe Haynes	8

Listen!
with Slocum

The gal who performed the greatest job of resuscitation in history will be on WJSV tomorrow at 10:30 on Arch McDonald's "Moondial." She is Bonnie Baker, the pert vocalist with Orrin Tucker's band. Bonnie, as you must know, took a song that has been dead for two decades and made it the hit of the year.

"Oh, Johnny, Oh" is the song. Miss Baker sings it in baby talk, and while I have always been slightly agin baby talk for the masses, the masses were very much for Bonnie and her rendition of the old favorite.

Before Bonnie cut loose with her version of you-know-what Orrin Tucker was leading a very, very fine dance band and having no trouble at all making ends meet. The boys always worked, people liked to dance to their music and all was well.

Suddenly came "Oh, Johnny, Oh" and the lady who chanted the choruses in front of Tucker's band was famous and Tucker was one of the Nation's top draws. If you don't take your variety regularly you won't know that a "draw" is a lad who can really coax the sheckels into a boxoffice. Purists often use "popular" as a synonym for "draw."

Miss Baker and Mr. Tucker will be Arch's guests tomorrow evening. Arch is something of a baby-talker himself when the mood is on him. Miss Baker vs. Mr. McDonald at baby talking. Mr. McDonald will have a 260-pound pull in the weights.

It will be rather difficult getting the Tucker Band (Oh, yes, Mr. Bell, it's playing at the Capitol, complete with Bonnie and the admission prices remain the same) into a studio so Arch will dish up a few records by the boys and Miss Baker.

The new WJSV show for Government workers, "Your Government This Week," has been switched to 7:30 p. m. It'll be heard the same evening as usual, however, Saturday.

"Orphans in Love"

By Marion White

Chapter 45

NOW Dr. Carman was telling them where to stand, side by side at the foot of the bed. Cooper was in the doorway, and Hulda. They would be witnesses, no doubt.

Felt Hand

He felt Millicent's hand in his, and he wondered whether she or Dr. Carman had put it there because he had no recollection of reaching out for it. Again he knew a sudden tender sympathy for her, the hand was so small and lax, and so icily cold.

"Do you, Peter Storm, take this woman . . ."

The words of the marriage ceremony fell upon his ears in a toneless routine. They seemed to come from far off, from out of the dark shadows beyond the room. He could not feel them directed to him.

He was not marrying Millicent. They faced each other in darkness, beyond the realm of the small circle of light which accented the prayer book and their two joined hands.

Yet he knew that he was answering the questions put to him: he was making his marriage vows, and Millicent was replying in turn. He heard her voice as he heard his own, unreal and hollow, weird echoes of something that could not be happening.

". . . pronounce you man and wife, and whom God hath joined together . . ."

It was over and he kissed her. It was a cold, unfeeling kiss; he would never know whether it had caught her upon the chin or the cheek or the forehead.

But it satisfied John Abbott. Peter looking down on the bed, saw him smile, saw the feeble attempt he made to raise his hand in blessing.

"Come here, my boy. Come here. Stay with me now. The others can go. There is much I have to tell you. Much I could not have told you before. Now that you are my son . . ."

Alone in Room

He was alone in the room with John Abbott. He listened to the strange fantastic story the man told him and wondered how another dawn could bring reality and conviction to this night of mystery.

A week after Roger Maillard left the city, Ellen stumbled at last upon the solution to her own problem. She could not stay with Rosalind. The last few days had proved that.

Something of that great desire which had sent her feet flying along the pavements of Fifty-seventh street to seek this job was gone. She could sew no longer. Not for Rosalind, at any rate. In three days she had ruined two dresses.

One she had idiotically cut wrong: She had made two backs instead of one front and one back. There was no excuse for such an error. The second dress she had stretched out of shape, destroyed it irrevocably, through the clumsy workmanship of her own fingers.

She could not go on like this. She could not spoil priceless silks and brocades through her own carelessness. And she could not trust herself to control the nervous uncertainty which induced this carelessness.

There was only one thing left for her to do. When the thought suddenly occurred to her, she wondered why it had been so long in coming. It was so very natural. She would go back to St. Peter's.

There was a place for her there. She would find, in time, the same quiet, tranquil happiness which enfolded Sister Cecelia and Sister Agatha. At any rate, she would not be alone.

That afternoon she went into Rosalind's office, and told her.

The older woman looked up in sheer amazement. For a long moment, she simply held her breath. "Ellen! You're not serious. Surely you can't be serious!"

"Yes, I am. I've thought it over very carefully, Rosalind."

"Then you haven't been happy here?"

"I've been very happy, in a way. I've been doing exactly what I always wanted to do . . ." The words trailed off, ended in a quick catch of her breath.

Rosalind turned about in her chair and studied the girl with mature, probing consideration. "What's the trouble, Ellen?"

Forces Gayety

Ellen laughed, forcing a great gayety into the effort. "There is no trouble, Rosalind. Except that I can't work any longer. I guess the desire for success was just a fever in my blood which I had to work out. And now that it's over . . ."

"Don't try to fool me, child. You're not the same girl who came here six months ago. You've lost that girl's eagerness and enthusiasm. Your eyes are sad. Your smile is forced and unnatural. Tell me the truth. Have you come to the conclusion that Mother Ross was right? That this work is too much drudgery?"

"Indeed not!" she protested vigorously. "I love the work. I like to be rushed . . . to be so busy that——"

"That you haven't time to think, eh?" Rosalind nodded wisely. "Then it's something outside of the shop. Is it a young man? That one who's parked here three night a week—young Maillard. Is he making you unhappy?"

"No. He's been very good to me. I like him a great deal."

"In love with him?"

Ellen shook her head slowly.

"Afraid to be?"

"Afraid?"

"Yes. Afraid that he'll let you down too hard."

Again Ellen shook her head. She stared down at her hands, studied their appearance absently. "I don't think he would. He asked me to marry him."

Rosalind gasped. "And you refused?"

"I told him that I couldn't . . ."

"My God!" The older woman shook her head in worldly disapproval. "Where's your sense of value, Ellen? There are a million girls in New York this minute who'd give their right arms for such a chance. Why, you'd step right up to top place in the social world. What is the matter with you?"

Bites Lips

"I guess I don't like the social world." She bit her lips to keep them from trembling. "I hate these women we work for; I hate the way they came in here, demanding and complaining and criticizing. I hate their self-assruance and poise——"

"Oh, nonsense! They're spoiled, most of them. But what does it matter? We charge them plenty for any insults to our vanity. Women who have money to spend are the same all over, no matter what their social class.

"Land's sake, you can go over to Paddy's Market on Ninth avenue and see poor working wives demanding and criticizing and complaining, in exactly the same way, over two cents' worth of soup greens.

"Women like to complain when they're buying. It gives more value to the purchase. My goodness, Ellen, don't let that get you down!"

"It does, though." She twisted her fingers nervously in her lap. Once she started to talk, she blurted forth a scathing, bitter denunciation of all women in general, of all beautiful, well-dressed, important women. Her words were an outlet for the pent-up jealousy and misery which had consumed her ever since the day on Tucker Hill when Peter had first told her of Millicent Abbott. She berated and stormed, naming in her accusation the entire social order to which Millicent belonged, because she could not name the one girl specifically.

Heartless

"They're selfish and heartless," she cried, though she meant: "She is selfish and heartless."

Rosalind listened to her, a little bewildered. It was not like Ellen to go on like this. Not like her at all. There was something behind it.

"They rob us——" Ellen was saying.

To Be Continued.

Lorton Chief Due to Head Penal System

Claude O. Botkin Chosen by Board Of Public Welfare To Succeed R. L. Huff

Claude O. Botkin, superintendent of the Lorton Reformatory, will succeed Ray L. Huff as general superintendent of the District's penal institutions, it was learned on reliable authority last night.

Tantamount to appointment, his name has been submitted to the Commissioners as choice of the Board of Public Welfare. The board controls Washington's prison system.

Huff will leave his post June 28 to become head of the Federal penitentiary at McNeil Island in Puget Sound, Wash. Although the Commissioners yesterday postponed action on Botkin's appointment, it was learned that Commissioner J. Russell Young has been instructed to investigate his qualifications and present recommendations at next Tuesday's meeting.

Botkin, former executive of the Federal prison at El Reno, Okla., was made superintendent of Lorton following the death of Col. William L. Peak, killed in an auto accident June 16, 1939.

It also was learned last night that Thomas M. Rives, superintendent of the District Jail, declined nomination to the post of general superintendent. Botkin was selected after careful consideration of candidates by the Welfare Board.

The name of Conrad Van Hyning, of Amherst, Va., also has been submitted to the Commissioners for the newly created position of principal assistant welfare director. The job pays $6,500 and was authorized in the 1941 budget. Van Hyning has been a welfare organizer in New York and Florida for several years.

Block-Booking System Called Totalitarian

Mrs. William T. Bannerman, motion picture chairman for the Housekeepers' Alliance and legislative chairman of the Motion Picture Research Council, yesterday discussed the Neely bill at the June meeting of the alliance, at the Y. W. C. A.

Mrs. Bannerman called attention to the fact that much of the testimony at the hearings on the bill was meaningless because the witnesses grouped all three classes of theaters in one.

There are three types, declared Mrs. Bannerman, which cannot be dealt with as one either as to trade practices or set-ups. They are those affiliated with the producers and therefore producer-controlled; the chain theaters and the independents. The chain and affiliated theaters enjoy more opportunity for selectivity than the independents which, she said, feel the full force of the compulsory block-booking and therefore oppose it.

The control of the motion picture industry, which the Neely bill is designed to curb, is practically totalitarian, Mrs. Bannerman told members of the alliance.

Colored Youth Held in Killing Of WPA Boss

Foreman Is Clubbed To Death in Dispute Over Extra Work

Bernard S. Riley, colored, 24-year-old truck driver, was at the District jail last night awaiting trial in the death of Peter R. Henderson, 54, of 1109 Twenty-fourth street northwest, a WPA foreman.

A coroner's jury held the colored youth for the grand jury yesterday after two housewives testified at an inquest they saw Henderson struck down from behind with a pick handle, June 10, at Seventh and Irving streets northeast.

Mrs Mary R. Dean, of 709 Irving street northeast, told the jury she saw Riley strike the supervisor when the latter threatened to call the police following an argument. Mrs. Anna M. Conrad, of 708 Irving street, told a similar story and said she shouted a futile warning to Henderson just before he was struck.

Detective Sergt. Fred Rawlinson, of the homicide squad said Henderson and Riley became involved in a dispute when the foreman asked the truck driver to distribute some red lanterns—a task which would have required Riley to work a few minutes overtime.

Riley argued with his superior over the order, Rawlinson stated, and during the dispute took up the pick handle. It was then, the detective added, Henderson started toward a telephone and was struck down.

Henderson was taken to Casualty Hospital where he died of a skull fracture last Thursday.

Better Business Bureau Adds Four Trustees

Robert E. Freer, Of FTC, Praises Work of Agency

Four new members were elected to the Washington Better Business Bureau's board of trustees yesterday at the organization's twenty-first annual meeting in the Raleigh Hotel.

In celebration of the bureau's "coming of age," the meeting also heard a review of activities by Claude H. Woodward, director, and a talk praising the group's work by Commissioner Robert E. Freer, of the Federal Trade Commission.

New Trustees Named

New trustees named are Everett J. Boothby, of the Washington Gas Light Co.; M. L. Langford, Sanitary Grocery Co.; Clarence G. Sheffield, Julius Garfinkel & Co., and Harry E. Worcester, jr., Morningside Laundry & Dry Cleaning Co. Thirty-two members of the board were reelected.

The bureau's activities in fraud prosecution, fraud prevention, promotion of fair advertising and selling practices and consumer education in money management, "buymanship" and everyday relations with business were outlined by Director Woodward, who declared:

"To the consumers, we say the business life of Washington is financially and morally supporting us for your protection as well as theirs. You have indicated your appreciation of that support by taking advantages of the services offered to you without charge. The bureau is going to diligently continue to make its services effective."

Freer Praises Work

Commissioner Freer said:

"Particularly was I pleased to see the forthright stand of the bureau against what I regard as one of the competitive evils in retailing today—that is, the misrepresentations of the value of goods to create in the mind of the purchasing public the idea that merchandise is being offered at a great bargain."

He delivered the opening address at the annual conference of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Potomac Synod of Evangelical and Reformed Church, held at Hood College. The conference ended today.

Roosevelt Names Hillman to Draft Plans For Training 2,000,000 U. S. Youths Annually

President Roosevelt yesterday named Sidney Hillman, labor coordinator of the advisory defense commission, to draft concrete plans for compulsory Government training of 2,000,000 American youths annually—an idea which the President discussed in general terms at his press conference Tuesday.

The White House said Hillman would be assisted by Secretary of Commerce Harry Hopkins and by officials of the Civilian Conservation Corps and the Civil Aeronautics Authority.

Congressional comment on the proposal augured well for its future. The Democratic majority and some Republicans appeared to favor it, but G. O. P. chieftains such as Alf M. Landon and Dr. Glenn Frank denounced it as the opening wedge to totalitarianism.

Stephen T. Early, White House press secretary, said the White House thus far has received little public reaction, but this was interpreted as a favorable sign. He emphasized that Hillman's task will be to work out a definite plan for submission to Congress.

Mr. Roosevelt said he hoped to send it to Congress in letter or message form in two or three weeks, or possibly six weeks if Congress takes a long recess for the political conventions.

A group of Congressmen who met with Mr. Roosevelt after Hillman's appointment, proposed to the Chief Executive that the National Youth Administration's organization be used as the basis for the program. Representative John W. McCormick (Democrat), Massachusetts, spokesman for the group, said they did not submit any detailed, concrete proposals.

He indicated, however, that NYA Administrator Aubrey Williams might be asked to submit to Mr. Roosevelt a definite program for utilizing the NYA setup.

Although Early indicated the plan had not reached the stage where any fixed age groups could be discussed, a highly-placed official said it would call up youths from 19 to 21.

This official estimated that about 2,000,000 young men and women would be trained annually "until the world returns to sanity." He said exemption would be included for 400,000 youths annually because of dependents or physical incapacity, and that there would be little or no pay, beyond subsistance, for those in training.

He declined to estimate cost of the program, but experts pointed out that the Civilian Conservation Corps figures approximately 42 cents a day for food and lodging for each enrollee.

Bible School Opens

The annual Daily Vacation Bible School opened yesterday at the Clarendon Baptist Church with an attendance of 57 children.
